200-MILE LIMIT ANSWER—DAVIS

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) Canadian fishermen may look forward to a free hand on their own shores in coming years, but for the moment they will have to be content with compensation for lost catches to foreign fleets, Fisheries Minister Jack Davis said Friday.

"The real answer is to get a 200-mile limit—then we've got it made," Davis told Bay of Fundy fishermen.

Davis said Canada already has a "nose count" of two-thirds of the member countries of the United Nations willing to accept the expanded Canadian fishing limit. He said the federal government is willing in the meantime to offer fishermen some form of payment other than unemployment insurance benefits. He did not elaborate.

Salmon Plant Takeover Requested

A crown corporation for marketing and processing salmon should be established by the provincial government, an NDP backbencher said Friday.

In a lengthy, heavily-researched speech on the control of B.C.'s food industry by "great conglomerate empires", Harold Steves told the legislature that control of the fishing industry, one of B.C.'s major food resources, is in the hands of two huge companies.

"British Columbia fishermen, cannery workers and consumers are being shafted in grand style," the Richmond MLA said.

To deal with the situation, Steves recommended the crown corporation be set up either by constructing new facilities or "putting existing facilities under public ownership and control."

He said the corporation could be financed through a two-price system for fish similar to federal oil policy.

The government should set up an inquiry into the financial structure of the fishing companies and all wholesale and retail chains in this province, Steves said, and should demand full financial disclosure.

He also recommended further loans or grants to food

Agnew May Plead Guilty

By RICHARD M. COHEN and LOU CANNON
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Vice-President Spiro Agnew's lawyers and U.S. justice department officials have been engaged in what was described Friday as delicate negotiations concerning a possible Agnew resignation to be coupled with a guilty plea to a relatively minor offence, say informed sources.

The negotiations, according to two sources, could be described as plea bargaining. One informed source refused to say whether the negotiations were close to a conclusion or to reveal the details of what has been discussed at the justice department.

A Capitol Hill source said: "We've got it on good authority Agnew is engaged in plea bargaining—that Agnew's resignation is part of the plea."

Neither the White House, the vice-president's office nor deputy attorney-general William Ruckleshaus would comment Friday on the report.

Disclosure of these negotiations came against the backdrop of a private White House meeting between Agnew and President Nixon on Thursday, which was held at Agnew's request. Despite an official agreement that neither men nor their staffs would discuss the meeting, a White House aide said Agnew's resignation was a topic of the meeting and that the vice-president left in a "very discouraged mood."

J. Marsh Thomson, the vice-president's press secretary, would not comment on the meeting itself, but made no attempt to conceal that Agnew was discouraged.

"It's understandable that the vice-president might be letting some of this discouragement show," Thomson said. "It's a rough ball game and the slings and arrows are coming hot and heavy."

Thomson, in keeping with Agnew's enunciated policy of not commenting on "source" stories, declined to discuss reports that the vice-president might quit.

Vic Gold, Agnew's former press secretary and frequent defender, said the vice-president would not resign.

Deputy White House press secretary Gerald Warren said Friday morning that the staffs of the president and vice-president would in no way whatsoever have anything to say about the meeting. When Warren was asked about the plea bargaining report, he said:

"I repeat what I said this morning."

The meeting between Nixon and Agnew was held in the president's office in the executive office building. It was the first conference between the two men since they met Sept. 1 for about two hours to discuss the accusations against Agnew.

Reportedly, Agnew had anticipated a shorter meeting Thursday. He was scheduled to play tennis later in the afternoon but cancelled his plans because the meeting ran longer than expected.

Also in Washington, a Maryland consulting engineer and close friend of Agnew has told federal investigators he has given Agnew at least $25,000 over the last decade, according to informed sources.

The information, the sources said, was provided by Lester Matz, a Baltimore County consulting engineer who has been given a limited form of immunity in the investigation of Agnew by federal prosecutors and a grand jury.

Matz, these sources said, told prosecutors his cash gifts to Agnew totalled somewhere between $25,000 and $50,000 and that they were made over a period of years.

ANGRY PRIEST RESIGNS

DENVER (UPI) — A Roman Catholic priest Friday said he burned his parish's financial records and a book of canon law because the church was a "Mafia-type thing" and the church's rigid rules were "sending people to hell."

The Rev. Richard Buhr, pastor of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Colorado Springs, burned the documents Thursday and then resigned from the priesthood.

Friday he explained that he did so because Archbishop James V. Casey demanded money from the parish for two years, and that some of it would be used for parochial schools, with which Buhr disagrees.

Critics Slam Gas Bid

The proposed entry of the provincial government into the natural gas industry was termed "unnecessary" Friday by spokesmen for opposition parties in the legislature.

Social Credit acting leader Frank Richter said he doesn't know why the government needs another Crown corporation, since B.C. Hydro is already in the business of distributing natural gas.

Liberal leader David Anderson said the establishment of a provincial agency to get into the business of marketing, producing, transmission and processing of natural gas, promised earlier by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, is "thoroughly unnecessary and counter-productive."

Anderson said the proposal for the natural gas agency, recommended in the report of the B.C. Energy Commission, was hastily made, as evidenced by its absence from the speech from the throne delivered last week.

The Liberal leader said the government is proposing it be given monopoly control of the natural gas industry in B.C. but charged that such control will not solve the problem of

PROPANE RATION ORDERED

WASHINGTON (UPI) Despite White House reluctance to set mandatory allocations on fuel oil, President Nixon Friday ordered rationing of propane fuel used primarily in rural areas for home heating, cooking and crop drying.

Government officials said details of the plan will be announced in a few days, and they indicated that the propane allocation may signal similar action on fuel oil.

Service stations in northern California closed down today to protest the government's freeze on the price of gasoline. In Chicago, plans went ahead for a gasoline dealers' "council of war" to decide how to deal with the federal rules.

Filling station operators in several areas of Washington state began shutting down Friday. One Mobil dealer said people were so afraid of running out of gas that he pumped 200 gallons Friday before he could get the station fully opened. When he finally did, he said, he had to shut down because there was no gas left.

As many as 50 cars at a time mobbed a gas station in Oakland, Calif., on the eve of a three-day boycott in the San Francisco Bay area which happened to coincide with the opening of deer season.

The California State Automobile Association reported that 90 per cent of the stations there were closed, and there were block-long lines at the few stations that stayed open.

'U.S. Was Set To Invade'

TORONTO (CP) — The Star quotes a former RCMP officer as saying that during the 1970 separatist crisis in Montreal, U.S. forces were prepared to move into Canada if the Quebec government fell or failed to preserve order.

But the report quoting Leslie (Jim) Bennett drew swift and official denial both in Ottawa and Washington.

"Absolutely false," said Rufus Smith, deputy assistant secretary of state for Canadian affairs in Washington.

In Ottawa, RCMP Commissioner W. L. Higgitt confirmed that there was a person by that name working for us.

He said Bennett was engaged "in the general area" of counter-espionage operations, but added that the allegations sounded "like the ravings of a disturbed mind."

The newspaper carried a copyright story from staff writer Tom Hazlitt in Johannesburg, South Africa, on an interview with Bennett, 53, described as being head of most of the RCMP's anti-espionage operations until his retirement last year.

The story says that Bennett claims:

—During the Quebec crisis, Canada had to assign investigators to shadow agents of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency who had infiltrated Montreal on a large scale.

—The Canadian government moved tanks and other heavy equipment into position south of Ottawa to offset a buildup of U.S. forces just south of the border, the Americans being prepared to move into Canada if necessary to protect their interests in the St. Lawrence seaway.

—During the 1960s a member of the RCMP sold out to the Soviet secret police for money. The man was cashiered and now is a "drifter" in Western Canada.

The Star says Bennett signed a statement saying he left the RCMP for medical reasons after serving for 30 years with the force and British secret service.

In a later story, The Star said senior officers of the

Weir Being Used

A protest group of young Indians continued today to use a weir they have been warned is illegal to catch salmon from the Cowichan River near Duncan.

Meanwhile, federal fisheries authorities in Vancouver and the Cowichan band council, which does not support the demonstration, have yet to get together to discuss the issue although the weir was built three weeks ago.

The demonstrators, led by Gordon Elliott, 29 of the Quamichan Reserve near Duncan, say band members are not able to catch enough salmon to feed their families under current regulations.

Sask. Abolishes Medicare Premiums

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney has announced abolition of medical-care insurance premiums, increased welfare payments and a raise in the provincial minimum wage to $2 an hour from $1.75.

That is just the beginning of a series of measures to ease the impact of inflation on lower-income groups, he told Saskatchewan residents Friday night on the most extensive radio-television hookup in the province's history.

Virtually all radio and TV stations carried the speech live, the only missing TV station being in Lloydminster, for technical reasons.

But both his announcement and its delivery ran into immediate criticism.

Opposition Leader Dave Steuart condemned the measures over-all as inflationary, although he welcomed the higher welfare payments, and blasted the premier for requesting blanket radio-TV coverage for an announcement that Steuart said could be made as well at far less cost at a regular news conference.

Talking to reporters later, Blakeney conceded that his measures will have some inflationary effect.

Adrift For Two Months

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Two men adrift aboard an overturned trimaran for more than two months in the Pacific were rescued Friday night by a British freighter, the Coast Guard reported.

Officers said James Fisher, Auburn, Wash., and Robert Tininenko, Longview, Wash., were "in very weak condition but mobile." They were picked up by the SS Benalder 900 miles southwest of San Francisco.

Tininenko told his rescuers that his wife, Linda, died on Aug. 11. The Benalder radioed that her body was not aboard the Triton.

Fisher and Tininenko were hanging on the overturned Triton, the Coast Guard said.

The trimaran departed the State of Washington early in July on a voyage to Marine Del Rey in southern California. The Triton radioed the Coast Guard on July 11 that it had capsized. The Coast Guard conducted an intensive search but failed to turn up a trace of the 31-foot vessel.

The Benalder radioed the Coast Guard that it sighted the overturned trimaran but there were "no signs of life" on it.

However, officers said, upon closer inspection the two men were found alive.

The Coast Guard said it was not know where the Benalder would take the survivors.

Libya Strafes Italian Warship

Libyan Mirage jets attacked the 850-ton corvette Pietro de Cristofaro in the Mediterranean Friday, slightly injuring two sailors.

"When the prime minister sends a personal communication admitting his jets made a mistake, then there is nothing else we are required to do," Italian sources said.

B.C. Student in Chilean Jail

VANCOUVER (CP) — The mother of a 23-year-old Canadian reported missing during a two-week visit to Chile said Friday night she has been advised her son is being held in a Chilean jail and interrogated by army authorities.

Margaret Everton of Vancouver said she was notified by Canada's external affairs department that her son, Robert Everton, has been located in a Santiago prison and that Canadian embassy officials have visited him.

The young man, a former student at Simon Fraser University, was reported missing several days ago.

Mrs. Everton said her son spent the last two years in neighboring Bolivia helping to set up a clinic and hospital for native Indians.

Everton arrived in Santiago a few days before last week's army coup toppled the leftist government of Salvador Allende.

Mrs. Everton said she had been told his stay in Bolivia may have influenced the new Chilean regime's decision to question him.

The military junta says it has jailed 30 officials of the Marxist government it overthrew last week.

Gen. Oscar Bonilla, the junta's interior minister, said Friday night the officials are being held in secret locations.

Soldiers and national police killed a Communist professor in a roundup of leftists and executed two persons accused of manufacturing bombs, the government said.

The junta Friday declared illegal all Marxist parties and confirmed the Soviet Union had broken off diplomatic relations with Chile.

MPs to Monitor L.I.P. Grants

Federal MPs will have in their power the final stamp of approval for all local Initiative Project grants awarded for this year's L.I.P. operating season from December until May.

A committee of nine will be established by the MP in each riding during the next few weeks to endorse community project's referred for final approval, Canada Manpower's area co-ordinator for Vancouver Island Doug Yearwood said Friday.

Yearwood said reports are that Donald Munro (PC—Saanich, Esquimalt) and Allan McKinnon (P.C. — Victoria) have decided to form one community committee, although the chairman has not yet been named.

Called the Constituency Action Group (CAG), the committee will attempt to ensure involvement at the grass roots level, he said.

"MPs have a vested interest," said Yearwood, "they've taken flack before and couldn't say anything about the projects."

"Now each community can decide their own priorities."

Yearwood said applications — to be received by Canada Manpower by Oct. 15 — will be referred to the regional office in Vancouver, then the provincial government for the concerned department's seal of approval and finally to CAG.

He said this year's applicants "are finding there's more to it (applying for a grant) than what they thought."

In former years L.I.P. projects had received criticism because they were approved and when the time limit was finished, projects had a habit of becoming the burden of municipal or provincial governments for financing.

One manpower spokesman said many interested applicants "were getting up and walking out" during the sessions.

Once the L.I.P. season is in progress project officers from the regional office will do field work assessing each individual project. "It's not a grant system — the applicant is contracted by the government and it must be monitored.

A major advertising campaign has been staged in media across the country, advising applicants of the change in mechanics, but the major objective of the program will still concentrate on the reduction of seasonal unemployment.

Statistics show the program created a total of 649 jobs during last year's season in the region, and administrators are hoping for an increase in applicants this year with the tightening up of approval procedures.

M-B TO SPEND $8M ON NEW LUMBER MILL

MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. Friday announced that a new mill to produce lumber and pulp chips from small logs will be built at a cost of more than $8 million at its Harmac pulp mill near Nanaimo.

Denis Timmis, president and chief executive officer, said construction of the new woodroom will begin when normal operations resume at Harmac, currently shut down by a labor dispute. The new plant will be in operation 18 months after the start of construction.

Timmis said it will create 214 new jobs and produce 130 million board feet of lumber a year.

"By employing modern, high-speed sawing technology and methods, the mill will constitute an important advance in greater utilization of smaller logs and will result in an upgrading of lumber products", he said.

A feature of the mill will be extensive mechanical sorting and handling of the six-inch to 13-inch diameter fir, hemlock and balsam logs it will saw into dimension sizes, ranging from two-by-fours to two-by-twelves. Logs will arrive at the mill in bundles and mechanical barkers will be used. These techniques provide environmental protection by preventing logs from escaping and bark from entering the Gulf of Georgia, the firm said.

Meanwhile, negotiations to end the Harmac strike opened Friday at the mediation services offices in Vancouver.

B.C.'s newly-appointed associate deputy labor minister, Jim Kinnaird, met with officers of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada Local 8, MacMillan Bloedel, and the Pulp and Paper Industrial Relations Bureau.

In another development, members of the Crofton local of the PPWC have each volunteered $30 a month to help fellow union members on strike at the Harmac mill.

Stan Shewaga, Harmac local chief negotiator, said Friday the union executive hopes to have a union store in operation by Wednesday.

co-ops in the province and establishment of public and co-operative food wholesale outlets to reduce the price spread between consumer and producer.

Steves detailed to the house the long chain of ownership and control which begins with B.C. Packers and the Canadian Fishing Company, "two vast conglomerates" which run the B.C. seafood industry.

B.C. Packers is owned by George Weston Ltd. which Steves says controls a conglomerate comprising 5,600 supermarkets and shops and 300 mills and bakeries.

"B.C. Packers' only so-called competitor in the seafood products industry (Canadian Fishing Company) is an American company which by pure coincidence charges exactly the same price — to three decimal points — for its canned salmon as B.C. Packers," he said.

"The B.C. Fisheries Association, which is a marriage of convenience between B.C. Packers and Canadian Fishing Company, is effectively in control of the majority of fishing vessels," he said.

The association has strong control over the sources of financing vessels, Steves said, and "indirectly in control of licencing" through influence in Ottawa.

The salmon which costs 20 to 50 cents a pound when the cannery buys it from the fishermen, ends up costing $2.49 a pound on supermarket shelves, according to the MLA.

"Small wonder," he says, "that in the 24 weeks ended June 17 this year, profits of B.C. Packers had risen 124 per cent on a sales increase of 25 per cent."

Also he charged the company has been hoarding canned fish supplies.

In using the fish industry as an example of the effects caused by multi-national food empires, Steves said that $42 million of B.C.'s $80 million export business was in whole fish with the processing being done in the export country.

He said $22 million of last year's harvest was fish roe shipped to Japan.

While this export increases the price of B.C. fish to B.C. residents, Steves says B.C. imports a great deal of tuna, "the only kind of canned fish a lot of Canadians can afford."

We're shipping out our food stuff for rich foreigners to eat and importing the cheap stuff for our own people," he said. "That makes no sense to me."

"Only by taking strong, concerted action will we be able to get off the international merry-go-round of skyrocketing price increases," he said.

Most of the moves had to come from Ottawa and Saskatchewan was willing to cooperate in any federal initiatives.

In the meantime, the province could act on its own.

Blakeney told reporters later other measures to be considered would include raising the pensions of retired civil servants and various measures to ensure adequate supplies of commodities at reasonable prices.

He gave no details of the welfare payment increases, beyond saying they will come in two stages, effective Nov. 1 and Jan. 1.

He told reporters welfare allowances would be increased so that families would get the full benefit of coming increases in federal family allowances:

"We are going to increase the assistance . . . so that they get the same cheque from us and a bigger cheque from the federal government."

Manchester U, Leeds Draw

LONDON (Reuter) — Manchester United, languishing in the bottom half of the English League First Division, today became the first soccer club this season to take a point off Leeds United.

The leaders had seven straight victories before United held them to a scoreless draw.

Derby County was the only winner among the top six clubs in the First Division, hammering Southampton 6-2 to jump from sixth place to second.

Leeds still is in front, with 15 points. Derby, three points behind, is second by virtue of a better goal average than third-placed Coventry City, which also has 12 points after a 2-2 draw against Newcastle United.

YULE MAIL DEADLINES

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office issued deadlines Friday for overseas Christmas mailings, with the warning that some parcels moved by surface mail will have to go as early as Oct. 1.

The lists are posted in post offices each year for public information purposes.

Earliest mails that must be sent are surface-transported parcels destined for the Middle and Far East, New Zealand and other South Pacific countries.

salmon by any means, including the old-time weirs, to meet family needs while ensuring sufficient salmon escape to provide future runs.

The weir they have built is a fence-like structure across two-thirds of the river about a mile above its mouth on the Koksilah Reserve.

Elliott said today the demonstrators have been using the weir but haven't had much luck yet because there is still not enough water in the Cowichan to start the major run of Springs up to spawn.

They caught half a dozen fish there Friday night, he said.

Asked if fisheries officers had been patrolling the river in the vicinity of the weir, Elliott said they had not.

Indians, who can get a special permit allowing them to spear salmon certain days each week, have been doing well fishing the river because they didn't have to worry about running away from the warden, he said.

Nobody has botherted to get the special permits, he said.

Energy Leading Issues

OTTAWA (CP) — Contentious energy issues will be the dominant topic in New York talks Tuesday between External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp and Henry Kinssinger, U.S. secretary of state.

Sharp leaves for New York Sunday night to address the United Nations General Assembly Tuesday. On the same day, he is to spend 45 minutes with Kissinger, confirmed in his new cabinet post by the Senate Friday.

Sharp told reporters Friday that bilateral matters will top his agenda with Kissinger.

He said it will be the first chance to explain to the U.S. administation a string of government actions that have displeased Washington, the most recent being an imposition by the National Energy Board of a 40-cent-a-barrel increase in the price of oil exported to the U.S.

tion in Okanagan South. Warren placed third after Social Credi winner Bill Bennett and the NDP's Bryan McIver.

"I feel it's time," Warren said in Vancouver Friday.

After his election to the post of party leader, Wallace announced that a general meeting called for Nov. 30 would be used as a leadership convention.

Neither Wallace nor Warren would confirm their candidacy in the leadership race, but both said it was a "consideration."

Wallace, always an advocate of having a party leader with a house seat, said the Tories would be "back to square one and no further ahead than before Warren resigned" if the leadership was won by a member with no seat in the legislature.

Wallace and Saanich and The Islands MLS Hugh Curtis hold the only Conservative seats.

Peter Hyndman, provincial party president, said Warren's resignation was accepted "with real regret and a profound sense of appreciation for all he had done."

Curtis said Friday Warren was a "victim of a changing political scene in B.C. and a swing to the New Democratic Party."

Warren has been party leader since November, 1971.

Despite his resignation, B.C. politics have not seen the last of Warren. He said he was going to Kelowna to take up his private law practice lack of competition in the industry.

"I want to stay in politics and I won't be runnning federally," Warren said.

Anderson called the energy commission report a "mediocre' document, the type which is produced regularly by the National Energy Board on the state of resources around the country.

He said there are no proposals of any magnitude made in the report and criticized it for lack of mention of research done on the subject in such other jurisdictions as Alberta.

Anderson agreed with some of the report's recommendations, such as the one calling for an annual review of the province's natural gas sources as well as other energy supplies.

And he agreed with the report's recommendation that no two-price system be adopted for natural gas.

But he said the government should not expect to be able to perform a regulating role in the natural gas industry at the same time that it operates directly in the field as a producer of the resource.

Argentines Vote

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — About 14 million Argentines will elect a president Sunday, and former dictator Juan Peron, 77, is expected to win by a wide margin. The newspaper says Bennett's comments about the Canadian security service were made in the context that the public neither knows nor appreciates the problems of those involved. A case in point was Canadian dealings with the CIA.

harold hosford

So maybe you thought windows were for looking through, or for letting light in, or keeping cold out. Sure, you're right! Windows are all these things but they're something more, something even their designers never thought of. They're instruments of science, or at least they can be on occasion.

Take July 28, at Windermere, way over in the southeastern corner of British Columbia. On that day, at the home of Ruth Satmann a window interrupted the flight of a medium-sized dun-colored bird and wrote a small chapter in this province's ornithological history.

That dun-colored bird, after passing through several hands including those of Bill Anderson, park naturalist at Yoho National Park, eventually came to Wayne Campbell, assistant curator of Birds and Mammals of the Provincial Museum and was duly recorded as a first for British Columbia.

It was a black-billed cuckoo, a familiar bird of eastern and central North America but one which until the Windermere window interceded, had only been seen in British Columbia twice before. It's "first" status comes from the fact that the bird was the first specimen for the province, a fact which confirms the species presence in the eyes of all, scientist and birdwatcher alike.

So mark another one up for windows. In the past 20 years windows have been playing an increasing role in extending our knowledge about the ranges of birds. Where sharp eyes have failed, windows have succeeded. Birds killed by flying into these so-called picture windows have resulted in a host of new records just like that of the black-billed cuckoo in Windermere.

That's the positive side of the picture. The negative side, of course, is a lot of unhappy people. Unhappy because, despite the gains in scientific knowledge, they'd just as soon have the birds alive.

Not every window becomes a death trap for birds, only those which, through circumstances, which may change from hour to hour and even day to day, create the kind of situation that lures birds to their doom.

The key seems to be one of two things. Either a window is located, with other windows, to create the illusion of a corridor through which birds think they can fly. Or, the most devastating combination of all, a window may frame a dark interior, and reflect a perfect picture of the sky and trees around it.

To a bird, this reflection is an invitation to diaster. Unaware of the invisible wall ahead, it dashes from one familiar environment into another apparently equally familiar environment and is usually fatally injured.

Both problems can be solved to some extent by light-colored curtains hung inside the windows but the reflection problem must be overcome on the outside.

Many home owners have turned picture windows that were death traps for birds into attractive show pieces — completely safe for birds — by simply hanging colorful tinsel streamers randomly across their windows.

In one year they cut my varied thrush kill from 14 to 3.

On the other hand, had they been up in Windermere wed still be looking for our first black-billed cuckoo.

FOOD DATING DETAILS

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal proposals and regulations on dating of fresh foods and labelling of pre-packaged goods were made public Friday by the government.

Interested parties, including companies and consumers, will be able to make their views known to the government on the proposed regulations for two months.

Consumer Affairs Minister Herb Gray announced "open date marking" proposals that will apply to all perishable foods except fresh fruit and vegetables.

Under the proposals, dealers will have to label dates after which food is not expected to maintain peak wholesomeness, palatibility and nutritional value.

The open date marking is intended only as a guide to consumers and is not a guarantee of quality of freshness of food bought on or before the date, Gray said.

The rules will come under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act passed in 1971 but not yet proclaimed.

The consumer affairs department says it is expected the act will be proclaimed or put in force by the end of the year, although the government will have to extend deadlines so companies can adjust to details in the regulations.

Under the act, quantities in a package must be on labels in metric and traditional units of measurement. Addresses of manufacturers or distributors and common or generic names of products must also be included.

Tory Applauds Grit Pluck For Courage in Failure

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition parties hurled parting shots at government anti-inflation policies Friday, then headed home for their interrupted summer recess.

Adjourning to Oct. 15, they wound up a special three-week Commons sitting that began Aug. 30 with emergency legislation to end the national rail strike and later shifted to problems posed by the rising cost of living.

The summer break originally started July 27, four weeks later than normal, after business bogged down and the minority Liberal government kept members sitting overtime to clear up some of the backlog.

Besides emergency strike legislation, the special sitting was highlighted by a series of measures to curb inflation and major changes in the government's oil policy.

Included were higher pensions and family allowances, subsidies to hold down milk and bread prices, a voluntary domestic freeze on petroleum products and a hotly-disputed crude oil export tax to prevent the United States from buying Canadian oil too cheaply.

Gerald Baldwin, retiring Conservative House leader, summed up his party's performance by congratulating Liberal MPs on having the courage to adjourn and "face their constituents with their ghastly record of incompetence."

Standing in the 264-seat House: Liberal 109, Conservative 107, NDP 31, Social Credit 15 and Independent two.

Among bills passed since Aug. 30 were measures raising family allowances to a straight $12 a month from the current average of $7.21 and boosting pensions to take the full effect of inflation into account.

Old-age pensions for single persons go to $105.30 from $100 monthly while benefits for retired government employees will climb by as much as 11.4 per cent.

All increases come into effect Oct. 1. The family allowance increase will be followed by another boost to average monthly benefits of $20 effective and taxable from Jan. 1, 1974.

Rhodesia Cancels U.K. Talks

SALISBURY (UPI) — Rhodesia has decided to halt all negotiations with Britain because there is no possibility of a settlement "for the time being," Premier Ian Smith said Friday.

Smith told the annual congress of his ruling Rhodesian Front that most black and white Rhodesians wanted a settlement, but "after trying for a few months, we came to the conclusion that we could not convince the British.

Foul Weather Hampers Terrace Air Search

Search for two planes lost in the rugged central interior of B.C. resumed today after an early morning delay caused by poor weather.

A spokesman for the Pacific Rescue Centre in Victoria said low lying clouds and fog were hampering the search being conducted by 11 military and up to a dozen civilian aircraft over a wide area extending between Terrace and Quesnel.

They are searching for a light plane missing since Tuesday on a flight between Quesnel and Terrace and for a Canadian Forces Tracker aircraft which joined the search Thursday and vanished on a return flight to Victoria that afternoon.

The twin engined Tracker, with four men aboard, is from the naval air station at Shearwater, Nova Scotia, temporarily based at VU-33 Squadron at Pat Bay and normally involved in routine pollution and fisheries patrols along the coast.

The crew, all from Nova Scotia, are Capt. Larry Schaufele of Shearwater; Capt. Ted Bade and Sgt. Sherman Pye, both of Dartmouth, and Capt. John Scammel of Lower Sackville.

Rescue officials believe only one man was aboard the light plane, a Stinson 108, he is CP Air pilot Neil Carey, 46, of North Vancouver.

The search for Carey is centred in Prince George and is being concentrated in the Quesnel and Vanderhoof areas.

The search for the Tracker is being co-ordinated in Terrace, and concentrated in a 1,000-square-mile triangle in the Terrace-Smithers-Telkwa Pass area.

Tight Grip on the Gas Works

In an age when known energy reserves are being consumed at unprecedented rates it is difficult to disagree with the principle of conserving these resources for the people who own them. In essence that is the theme of the British Columbia Energy Commission report released Friday by Attorney General Alex Macdonald. But the report deals in generalities, and final judgment should wait until specific legislation is tabled in the house, probably at the current session.

Establishing a Crown agency to engage in production, processing, transmission and marketing of natural gas, as recommended in the report, will be a legislative priority. But the Crown agency concept begs a key question. Will private concerns such as Westcoast Transmission still be allowed to produce and sell natural gas to their own customers or will they be relegated to carrying only government approved gas?

Is the government aiming at a natural gas monopoly or will it also allow competition from private industry? The only indication is Mr. Macdonald's statement that government intends to have a hand in processing all natural gas supplies when the Crown agency reaches maturity. At the same time the commission says government should leave exploration and discovery to private industry. Though even here the report recommends reducing the term and extent of exploration on Crown lands to ensure a faster turnover; that is more competition in exploration.

An alarming sense of urgency pervades the document. Because of "underpricing" it claims producers and the province are losing more than $100 million per year. And the attorney general echoes these sentiments when he says that if current export contracts are honored the province's natural gas supply will be depleted by 1989. At present B.C. exports 70 per cent of its natural gas production, yet 50 per cent of B.C.'s households rely on other fuels. With this in mind the government proposes to almost double natural gas prices from the current 31-32 cents per thousand cubic feet to 58 cents per thousand cubic feet. Not only will this discourage current exports, but it will all but rule out future exports when the government agency gets into high gear.

If the recommendations result in legislation — and Mr. Macdonald hinted that the report was simply a feasibility study of government policy — then it is one of the most sweeping resource documents ever produced by any provincial government. The vagueness concerning the future of private producing and transmission companies under the government plan may have been intentional, carrying the threat of "pull up your socks" or government will intervene. Not that such a threat is a radical departure in times of diminishing energy supplies.

The federal energy report said that more government intervention in private industry was inevitable in order to allocate energy resources in the future. Generations of Canadians have watched while our energy resources built foreign industries. If a tight grip on our natural gas pipelines is needed to ensure the well-being of future generations, then so be it. At this juncture the provincial government is showing bold initiative in entering an area where other legislative bodies fear to tred, perhaps with good reason. With its eyes on the far horizon the government should be careful not to stumble and crush the private industry right under its feet.

Saxe Point — Bill Halkett

This Time the Indians Won

In a historic decision Mr. Justice William Morrow of the Northwest Territories Supreme Court has given Indians permission to file a claim against 400,000 square miles in the north. At the same time the court has restrained the Indians from filing until the federal government has exhausted all avenues of appeal. Considering that the federal government tried to stop Judge Morrow from hearing the case in the first place and then withdrew its lawyers when he did hear it, the court has been fair to all concerned.

But the decision has more import than an unseemly squabble between the federal government and a court which it created. By saying that Indians have a legal right to file a declaration of interest on a large chunk of the Western Arctic, including the Mackenzie Valley, the court implies Indians may have a valid claim to jurisdiction over the area. And that is something the federal government wanted to avoid.

The contentious area is rich in oil and gas. It is also on the route which the proposed $5 billion Mackenzie Valley pipeline will have to take. Both the federal government and the Indians are well aware of these facts. Even if Ottawa eventually defeated the Indians in a long drawn out court battle, it would delay development in the area. Conversely, if the Indians won the claim, costs of development would skyrocket as the natives made sure their equity was protected.

While Justice Morrow has allowed land dealings between development companies and the Crown to proceed in the contested area, he has also instructed the land titles registrar to record all transactions "so as to provide the Indians with a record of what damages they may have suffered during the stay."

The federal government will certainly appeal the decision. But at this stage in the dispute the Northwest Territories Indian Brotherhood is in a good legal position that could result in it controlling an area larger than that of many countries. Even more reassuring is the fact that Canadian courts are scrupulously taking account of historic Indian land claims.

Need to Let Each Other Know

WASHINGTON — Canadian Ambassador Marcel Cadieux's was a lone voice in the wilderness between Ottawa and Washington this week when he made a brave speech about energy policies.

All official communications on that subject were short-circuited by Ottawa's unilateral action in announcing its Canada-first oil policy and in speedily implementing the two-price part of it. Unilateral, in this context, is the polite diplomatic word for zapping the Americans without warning.

The remarkable thing about Cadieux's speech was that it called for co-operation between two countries at a time when co-operation is conspicuously absent.

It is true that Energy Minister Macdonald was rather preoccupied at home with trying to patch up federal-provincial relations as a result of the government's proposals.

Although they haven't been getting their information from official contacts, U.S. government and industry are following these Canadian capers with great interest and considerable amusement.

"Is Alberta at war yet?" asked a state department official as Macdonald flew into Calgary to try to mollify a furious Premier Peter Lougheed.

Americans Not Amused

But the Americans are not amused at the prospect of losing Canadian oil imports on which they have depended or at paying more money for what they can still get. Canada has been the biggest source of U.S. crude oil imports, supplying more than 38 per cent of the total; despite all the fuss about the Arab market, less than 20 per cent of American oil imports come from the Middle East.

Cadieux was apparently acting on his own initiative in speaking out on energy relations. He likes to travel and he likes to talk so he used an invitation from the International Relations Club at Portland, Ore., to make his energy speech.

The speech was prepared here, not in Ottawa, and evidently without the benefit of current advice because the text bore distinct signs of hasty amendment to up-date the ambassador's explanation of the Trudeau government's oil policies. Perhaps he was as surprised as the Americans by recent developments.

But he is, physically, at least, closer to the officials of the Nixon administration grappling with energy problems which are becoming critical as winter approaches.

Although Cadieux went to some length to try and explain why Canada is getting touchy about oil exports, his speech was conciliatory in tone and made several references to the need for co-operation and mutual consideration. It was just the sort of statement that could —and should—have been forthcoming from the policy-makers in Ottawa.

It may be that the Trudeau government feels quite justified in acting without consulting Washington; there are enough past instances of failure by the Americans to warn or brief Ottawa on important policy decisions. There is also a considerable amount of tension because of nationalistic political pressure in Canada.

In another speech, at Seattle on Wednesday, Cadieux mentioned this as one of the factors causing problems in Canada-U.S. relations as a whole and one which has intensified on both sides of the border.

He cautioned Americans to be tolerant in appraising Canadian postures. "How well do you know the limit?" he asked. "Do you see the difference between anti-Americanism and pressures for legitimate national objectives such as independence, unity and survival?"

However, he also had advice for Canadians. "We should endeavor to determine ourselves where our fundamental interest lies as opposed to secondary issues and endeavor to let you know clearly and if necessary vigorously as well as publicly where we stand. This involves a clear obligation for us to pull ourselves together and to play our cards right," Cadieux told his Seattle audience.

MARCEL CADIEUX
. . . lone voice

This is what he was trying to do on energy policy, outlining some of the reasons for ensuring adequate supplies of oil and gas in Canada at a price that Canadians could afford, as well as some of the problems in developing new resources. But at the same time he was stressing the need for inter-governmental co-operation and communication.

Cadieux deserves high marks for trying at a difficult time to get Canada's views across. If these views had been communicated sooner and on a more official and direct basis the reception in Washington might have been a lot more sympathetic.

Most U.S. government energy officials do understand Canada's motivation but they are piqued at the way oil policy has been handled.

Oil, however, is only the beginning. There is now anxiety about exports of natural gas, too.

It follows the announcement by Westcoast Transmission that it will have to cut back supplies to its customers this winter because one of its major producers can't deliver.

Westcoast's biggest customer is El Paso Natural Gas in the U.S. and it is feared that El Paso might have to bear the full brunt of the cutback.

This will depend on the National Energy Board, the instrument of the sudden order for increased oil prices, which is being pressured by the B.C. government to ensure that Canadian customers of Westcoast are given full protection.

Although the Westcoast situation may be resolved without too much pain, it does raise the whole question of gas export policy and it may inspire a complete review in line with the oil policy.

Although there have been vague mentions of Ottawa-Washington talks about energy from both sides nothing has yet been arranged.

In fact there hasn't been an official meeting (discounting the abortive visit of a parliamentary delegation with no authority to speak for the government) for some months. A conference between Macdonald and top U.S. officials could have been highly beneficial before the Trans-Alaska Pipe Line debate began in Congress this summer.

Hardened Attitudes

There wasn't one and since no one here knew exactly what Canada wanted to do the pipeline project is being processed as fast a possible and U.S. attitudes have hardened on sending the Alaska oil by supertankers to Washington State refineries.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has said that he will raise the question of keeping tankers away from Cherry Point and out of the Strait of Juan de Fuca when he has a courtesy meeting with secretary of state designate Henry Kissinger at the United Nations next Tuesday. But the chances are that Kissinger will only say "what's Cherry Point?"

Confirmation is awaited here of Macdonald's proposal to visit Washington sometime in the near future. He has said he wants to meet President Richard Nixon's energy czar, John Love.

Macdonald is also said to be planning a trip to Venezuela to discuss new contracts for supplying oil to the east coast of Canada. He may make a diversion to Washington at that time. He would probably find Love receptive to a meeting although the U.S. energy commissioner may not live up to his name in words.

C. L. SULZBERGER

The Art of the Ambassador

NEW YORK — Fifteen years ago (Sept. 15, 1958) the United States signed four conventions approved by a Geneva conference on maritime law, but the curious fact is that there is still probably less world agreement on the rights of nations in or under the high seas than ever before. The one more confusing legal area is definition of national air limitations.

The only serious effort to describe the latter is the old Roman principle — based on assumption that the earth was flat — that surface boundaries could be considered as extending upward to the heavens. There has been no agreed modification of this archaic concept since men and their machines began penetrating outer space.

Violating Air Space

As a consequence, Soviet and American satellites are violating the theoretical air space of each other and almost every country many times a day, even if nobody complains. The sole effective assertion of sovereignty above a nation is by actual, not potential, use of anti-aircraft weapons. Had Francis Gary Powers been flying in a low-level satellite instead of a high-level plane, the U-2 spy incident might have been differently described.

Territorial waters have customarily been recognized as within three miles of a country ever since the eighteenth century when that was considered maximum artillery range for shore defence. This tradition faded after World War II, and a meeting at Geneva last month, preparing for U.S. conferences here in November and at Santiago, Chile, next year, overwhelmingly agreed on extending the limit to 12 miles. But this does little to end prevailing anarchy; many lands claim up to 200 miles off their coasts.

In earlier days it was accepted that the seas belong to no one. Now it is widely held that they belong to every one as a common heritage. But where general ownership begins and ends is as difficult to define as the question of territorial air, which is inferentially accepted as maximum altitude of winged planes. For international seas and airs there has been no formalized accord such as that which neutralized Antarctica (at least as far as Washington and Moscow are concerned).

Various lands argue special viewpoints on maritime matters. Some with heavy offshore fish runs, like Peru, claim 200-mile limits to exclude the trawler and whaling fleets of distant lands like Japan or Norway (Canada is claiming rights to the edge of the continental shelf). Special problems are posed by narrow straits leading from one sea to another and to which naval powers insist they must have free access.

Now, in addition to fishing and strategic questions, new problems are assuming importance. Experiments in water farming (hydroponics) are being pursued in the hope of increasing world food supplies. Pollution has become a major problem and every seaside country wants to guarantee its waters' cleanliness. Finally, the ocean floor has been recognized as a vast treasury of mineral wealth.

The U.S.A., Japan and West Germany have developed technical means for exploring and exploiting valuable submarine deposits, many of them in short supply on land. At least 40 companies from different lands have already invested hundreds of millions of dollars in this new kind of prospecting.

The Howard Hughes organization has reportedly built two specialized vessels at a cost of $250,000,000 for what is called nodule mining. Nodules, varying in size from pebbles to immense boulders, were created on sea beds through the eons by chemical processes that have been hitherto undisturbed.

Enormous amounts of iron, copper, manganese, cobalt and nickel are contained in these formations. Probably this resource is large enough to alter existing supplies and prices of key metals over some of which a few nations possess dominant controls.

Finders, Keepers?

Any extensive mining of such deposits by dredging and compressed-air pumping — sometimes at three-mile depths — has yet to prove effective but it is merely a matter of time. The question is whether there will, by that time, be agreement on the legal ownership rights of offshore deposits — and how far offshore — and whether it will be accepted that beyond such defined limits, regardless of depth, it will be a matter of finders, keepers.

The slow pace of advance in adjusting international law to the burgeoning technological world makes it improbable that a new code will be agreed upon before the dredges have busily set to work. One has only to recall the total absence of accord on territorial air limits and where global space begins to view with pessimism an adjudication of maritime rights.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

We want water for life itself so normally we just turn on the tap and there it is. But do we really think just where it comes from and how precious it is for our very existence?

In the region where we are living water is in very short supply, yet are we saving it, or do we just go on in our normal way using it beyond our capacity to replace it?

All our lakes are down in level, and if it should be a dry fall we could be on short supply.

Just what does it mean to other living things such as the fish that will be coming back to Goldstream to spawn?

Is there going to be enough water to bring them home again? If not, it will mean a lost run for the coho in two years and the chums in four years' time. It is possible that this descending cycle may carry on for several seasons.

At present the river is at its lowest point and there is no food in the river for the salmon. When the water is shallow it becomes too warm and algae covers the rocks so minute creatures cannot survive. Therefore, there is no food for the fingerlings.

As you drive around the countryside how many of you notice that the trees and shrubs are changing color in various shades and colors? For instance, some of the Garry Oaks have turned brown while others are still green. This means that those which are still green have found a water supply down in the ground. Many of the maples are the same way. The alders are also turning a rusty black when they should still be green for a while yet.

We are told that the rain falls in cycles. If this is true we must be at the peak of the driest year. There is not too much we can do about this, but we can and should do something to save the water we have in our lakes and reservoirs.

The lawns and playing fields will come back again when the rains come, for their root system always holds sufficient water.

During times like this we are always trying to put the blame on someone else, yet this should not be so. We are all to blame for we do not read the signs.

Is it not time to think how we are using our natural resources and environment, for when we get droughts like the current one everything suffers. not only the plant life but the other living things that go to make up the whole.

Insects, birds and even the little four-legged creatures that run upon the earth suffer.

A Tale of Two Writers Who Live Worlds Apart

By GEORGE F. WILL

Life is unfair. Saints suffer and sinners prosper and there is no use brooding about it. But occasionally there is so conspicuous an incongruity in the rewards of life, so random an apportionment of pleasure and pain, that, try as one might, one cannot wrench the mind's eye away from it.

Consider the sickening contrast between the situation of two writers much in the news these days.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn is the greatest living Russian writer, a giant in the tradition of Tolstoy. Norman Mailer works hard to be the most publicized American writer. He is a money-grubber in the Bobby Riggs tradition, but he lacks Riggs' cheerful self-knowledge.

Everything Solzhenitsyn writes enriches our civilization Mailer is a one-shot wonder, like Bo Belinski, the miscreant who pitched a no-hitter in his first game and made the rest of his career a study in self-degradation, substituting buffoonery for achievement. Mailer's first novel, "The Naked and the Dead" (1948), was superb. Other than that, however, he has not produced a scrap of high-calibre fiction in a quarter of a century.

Solzhenitsyn has been driven, against his inclination, to have a "public" life beyond his art. He is fighting a deadly serious war of nerves, words and gestures against Soviet tyranny. His running battle against the tyrants is an example of a bravery that can barely be understood by those of us who were born free.

Mailer hangs around prize-fighters, brawls on the Dick Cavett show with Gore Vidal and fancies himself very brave. He has raised hairy-chestedness to a metaphysical principle: I sweat, therefore I am.

Although Solzhenitsyn's fiction bears the mark of his hideous experiences with a sadistic regime, he is almost bashful about it. He reminds us that others who suffered more cannot testify.

Mailer is not bashful. His writings, now a degenerate form of "journalism," celebrate the tribulations of the Author As Drunk, the Author Levitating the Pentagon, the Author Solving the "Murder" of the Movie Star.

One of Solzhenitsyn's most recent publications is his Nobel Prize acceptance lecture. It is among the most eloquent political statements of the century. If it is not the most important, that is because its intended audience — the western public — is pre-occupied with trivialities like Mailer.

Mailer's latest work is a sleazy, slovenly, dishonest exploitation of Marilyn Monroe. It is in a nip-and-tuck battle with Jacqueline Susann's latest epic for the reading public's money. Mailer's book will make him a million dollars.

Alimony laws make the costs of serial monogamy steep, so Mailer wrote "Marilyn" with an eye cocked on his former wives' lawyers. He conjured up some lurid lies about a dead Kennedy and a CIA plot to "explain" the Monroe suicide as murder.

In his Nobel lecture Solzhenitsyn says: "Archaeologists have uncovered no early stages of human existence so primitive that they were without art." Yes, but Mailer, America's primitive, is doing his best in that direction.

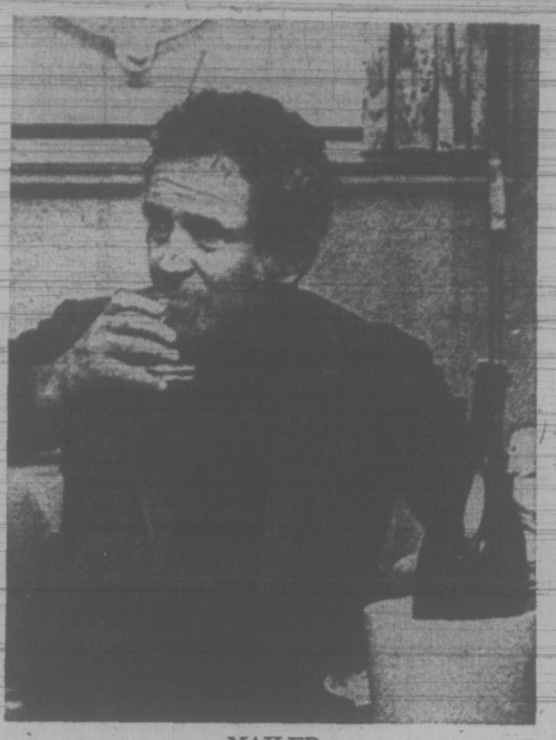
There is a constant whine in Mailer's omnipresent voice. He says Time magazine's cover made him look ridiculous. He says the critics should stop using the word "plagiarism" to describe his borrowings from other books about Monroe.

There is no whine from Solzhenitsyn, risen from the living dead of Soviet prisons: "To reach this chair from which the Nobel lecture is delivered . . . I have mounted not three or four temporary steps but hundreds or even thousands, fixed, steep, covered with ice, out of the dark and cold where I was fated to survive, but others, perhaps more talented, stronger than I, perished." But Solzhenitsyn, devoid of self-pity, has prison to worry about, not Time magazine covers.

It might be nice if, as a kind of cultural exchange, the U.S. could trade Mailer and a utility infielder to the Soviets for Solzhenitsyn. That would get even for the grain deal.

But Solzhenitsyn would not leave Russia. His art is rooted in a palpable love of country, a contagious inspiring love that causes fear and trembling in the regime now in its 56th year of tormenting that country. Solzhenitsyn would not leave Russia because he is committed to using his art to defend the dignity of the Russian people.

Mailer would not leave the U.S. because he is passionately — and, to give the devil his due, candidly — committed to using his skills, such as they are, to line his pockets. As Mailer said in justifying "Marilyn," he needs the money.



MAILER

SOLZHENITSYN
. . . there's no self-pity

Solzhenitsyn says literature is "The living memory of a nation." Mailer, having long ago abandoned literature, hawks his wounded ego on talk shows while promoting a book about a tawdry Hollywood episode that should be trivial in the nation's memory but, alas, is not.

In "The First Circle" Solzhenitsyn says:

"Aren't writers supposed to teach, to guide? . . . and for a country to have a great writer — don't be shocked, I'll whisper it — is like having another government. That's why no regime has ever loved great writers, only minor ones."

Mailer, who considers himself a radical and a threat to the established order, is, in fact, like most food for base appetities, an enervating opiate. He raises no awkward questions, offers no troubling visions. I expect some American regime will give him the Medal of Freedom.

Solzhenitsyn's cry is: "Woe to the nation whose literature is cut off by the interposition of power." And woe to the nation whose literary lions, strutting and grubbing on television, are nothing more than servants of commercial publishing powers.

To give the devils their due, the Soviet tyrants, their regime based on the denial of human dignity, are correct in considering Solzhenitsyn subversive. Mailer, his dignity invested in "Marilyn," is simply irrelevant to the course of American society. Isn't it ironic?

Mailer, who lusts to be the most public of writers, has no public-spirited purpose, only a frivolous public persona. Solzhenitsyn, who knows there is an inherent tension between the private nature of creation and the demands of any public role, is compelled against his artist's nature to play a public role of breathtaking grandeur.

Washington Post

THE LAST SANCTUARY IS GONE

When There's Nothing to Fear . . .

By RICHARD NEEDHAM
The Globe and Mail

Through the centuries, people have been shocked by the murder of Thomas a Becket. It wasn't the murder that shocked them; life was cheap then, life is cheap today. (I see by the paper that New York alone had 800 murders in the first half of 1973.) The shock of the Becket murder has always been that he was Archbishop of Canterbury; and, worse still, that his killing took place right in the cathedral — the holy place, the sanctuary.

Would a similar event shock people today? Not so much, I think, as in the past, which brings me around to that Kitchener clergyman, Rev. Eric Snider, who was stabbed and robbed in a Manhattan park as he made his way to a meeting with officials of the National Council of Churches on Riverside Drive. Had he gone there in a cab, he'd have been okay, but he made the mistake of taking the Lexington Avenue subway, getting off at the 116th Street station and then, of all things, walking through Morningside Park, which directly adjoins the Harlem ghetto just below Morningside Heights.

Now, Morningside Heights ought to be one of the finest and safest places in the world. It has Union Theological Seminary, the Jewish Theological Seminary, Riverside Church, the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the Interchurch Centre, Corpus Christi Church, Barnard College, Woodstock College, and Columbia University. Mayor John Lindsay of New York says it's "the most important urban educational centre in the world."

For all this, Morningside Heights is a dangerous place. I recall visiting Columbia University some 10 years ago, and being sternly warned to stay in my nearby hotel after dark. Just last year a former Torontonian, Prof. Wolfgang G. Friedman, was robbed and murdered in that area, and just last month, Rabbi David Wolf Silverman of the Jewish Theological Seminary was beaten and robbed (during the daytime) in a nearby subway station. Barnard College (female) used to get two-thirds of its students from out of town. That's now down to 50 per cent, because out-of-town parents just don't want their daughters to be in that part of New York.

For about a year now, I've been reading the New York papers every day, and noticing how many crimes — including murder — are committed in churches and synagogues. Thus, on a recent morning, two men entered the rectory of Holy Family Church on East 47th Street, and asked to see the priest in charge. When taken to the interview room to see Msgr. Timothy Flynn, they drew guns, bound and gagged him, and walked off with the $800 Sunday collection.

Or again from The New York Times: "A synagogue on the Lower East Side was fire-bombed early yesterday morning but the occupants of the building were not hurt. According to police and fire department reports, and the eyewitness acount of Rabbi Shulem Rubin of the Congregation Agudath-Elazer at 381 Eighth Street, a group of youths gathered near the synagogue at about 12:30 a.m. and began hurling stones at the building. Many of the windows were shattered. Then, as the rabbi was trying to call the police, some youths tossed three Molotov cocktails into the synagogue's backyard. The youths then moved to the front of the building, carrying a gasoline tank. They spilled the contents near the front door of the synagogue and set fire to it at which point the police and fire trucks arrived. The youths ran away, and no arrests were made."

At St. Bonaventure's Catholic Church in the Queens section of New York, Rev. John Conlon was killed with two bullets as he counted the collection. The man charged with the murder and robbery was baptized in that very church. At Pontiac, Mich., two youths entered a church in the middle of the service, held the minister at gunpoint right in front of the altar, and walked off with the collection. At Kehillath Jacob Synagogue in the Mattahan section of Boston, it was found necessary to post armed guards at the door during service, with members of the Jewish Defence League protecting the synagogue at night. According to Newsweek, "Vandals have broken into the rabbi's house several times and once the rabbi's wife was assaulted in front of the shul itself."

What all this suggests is there are a great number of criminal people in the United States to whom, quite literally, nothing is sacred. They despise and defy the laws of man, they despise and defy the laws of God. And if you reply to me that God is dead, that God is irrelevant, I would toss back at you those terribly prophetic words of Feodor Dostoievsky, "If God does not exist, then anything is permissible."

In Victor Hugo's great book, Les Miserables, the fugutive Jean Valjean stole the candlesticks from the bishop who had befriended him. When police caught Valjean with the candlesticks, the bishop said they weren't stolen, he had given them to Valjean, and this brought about Valjean's total redemption. Again, there was the secene in the picture La Strada where the brutish carnival preformer steals gold and silver ornaments from the convent which has given shelter to him and his female companion. She watched with horror, so did I, but times change.

Times have changed to the point where, according to the New York City Police Department, the year 1972 saw close to 2,000 crimes committed in churches and synagogues or on their property. These crimes went all down the line —murder, assault, burglary, arson, vandalism, rape, and sexual assault. As the New York Post puts it, "Throughout the city, the peace of the sanctuary is being shattered by the sounds of splintering stained glass and gun shots. The traditional refuge for fugitives from justice has become their target instead."

There's a famous church on Fifth Avenue, Ascension Episcopal. For more than 40 years, it called itself the Church of the Open Door, and lived up to that title by being open 24 hours a day. It's now open only five hours a day. Women worshippers are in most New York churches requested to carry their purses with them to the communion rail; and, as in St. Patrick's Cathedral, are discreetly reminded to keep their purses in front of them as they kneel to pray.

Rabbi Reuben Savitz of the Orthodox Union sums up the whole thing not just for New York, but I guess for the whole United States: "There is generally a lack of standards or any moral feeling — and that means that the fear of being caught, the fear of consequences, is no longer very strong. Too often, in our society today, there are no consequences." Quite right, and I see ample reason to apply the same thing to Canada. Parliament is physically attacked, Parliament's orders are defied—and there aren't any consequences.

I've learned in a lifetime that if you are to keep human beings, especially great masses of them, in any sort of peace and order, there must be something or someone they fear. For many centuries, that something or someone was God. You behaved yourself because if you didn't, you would be punished by Him in this world and (especially) in the next. But who now has the hope of Heaven, the fear of Hell? In his modern classic, The End of the American Era, Dr. Andrew Hacker says:

"Most Americans in the past were bound by religious rules sufficiently to ensure a measure of social order. America was not immune from violence and crime, or alcoholic excess and sexual impropriety, but there might have been a great deal more obstreprousness in the slums and small towns and countryside had it not been for the role of religion. Despite the virulence of Hell's Kitchen, frontier settlements, and Southern lynch mobs, the nation as a whole did not seem obsessed with threats to personal safety and security. Indeed, most citizens wished to be thought respectable and law-abiding, and much of this impetus was religious in inspiration."

He goes on to say that Americans have pretty much thrown religion (along with patriotism) out the window. There's no point trying to bring back the fear of God; the fear of Hell, the fear of the priest or the parson, the fear of what the neighbors might think or say. How about fear of the law? That's gone, too, as the police in every big American city will tell you. The criminal class in those cities jeer at the police, systematically murder the police, and get away with it. And even if they do go to jail, they have "rights"—they're cautiously treated and are soon out on the streets again.

Perhaps you don't like that word fear—it reminds you too much of Nazi Germany, Communist Russia, Ian Smith cracking the whip in Rhodesia, General Amin doing the same thing in Uganda. How about the word awe? Lao-Tzu said it 2,500 years ago, "When men lack the sense of awe, there will be disaster." How about reverence, or its younger brother, respect? How about plain good manners, courtesy, politeness—the kind of thing you find among the poorest Mexicans and Spaniards and Japanese and Greeks? How about the British creed, so effective in the past, still pretty effective today—"It's not done"?

Something there must be, something people look up to, something they consider as bigger and better and more important than they are, something that will cause them to behave themselves. I do not see any such thing (or person) in the United States; I do not see any such thing (or person) in Canada. I am therefore compelled to the conclusion that what is happening there will in the not-too-distant future be happening here.

THE FAMILY KEY

By JAMES DALY
Toronto Star

A generation fulfils itself by passing on what it loves. In personal life, it does this largely through the family. When the family cannot do this, something dies, something inside people, perhaps inside whole societies. Then people rush around looking for fashionable excuses to commit collective suicide.

Whole societies can lose the will to live when they lose the capacity to guide youth. Conversely, they will flourish when parents are ready to inform the world that they are the only real experts, and insist on the right (a very burdensome right, by the way) to make the most basic choices for their children until those children are mature enough to strike out entirely on their own.

When that happens, the schools will also recover their nerve. When parents can be parents, teachers can be teachers.

WHERE'S PROTEST TO SOVIET?

DOUBLE-STANDARD LIBERALS

Judging by his latest public comments, the Russian novelist and Nobel Prize winner, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, would be in almost as much trouble (if less physical danger and discomfort) with Western intellectual liberalism as he is now with the Soviet authorities, if he lived in, say, Toronto.

In his 3,000-word statement nominating his fellow dissident, physicist Andrei Sakharov, for the 1973 Nobel Peace Prize, Solzhenitsyn cut a few strips off Western liberals for their ever-ready denunciations of oppression in countries under rightist governments and their reluctance to say anything at all about the same behavior of Communist governments.

For example, he referred to the case of Pyotr G. Grigorenko, a Soviet dissident who has been held in a mental hospital for the past four years. How would world opinion have reacted if South Africa had held a black leader in these conditions?

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

"The storm of world-wide rage would have long ago swept the roof from that prison."

Solzhenitsyn could have mentioned other matters. Liberals protested the Rhodesian arrest of a British journalist but ignored a similar and worse case in Tanzania. They denounce a military coup in Chile and deplore the return of Juan Peron to Argentina, but black terrorism in Southern Africa has the support even of the World Council of Churches.

In Toronto, as elsewhere, protest activity against the regimes in Greece, Spain and Portugal is proper, but those who demonstrate against Tito of Yugoslavia or President Nikolai Podgorny of Russia are "reactionary." The government of Zambia can gloss over the murder by its troops of two Canadian girls, and liberal Canadian apologists write letters to the editor explaining why it is wrong to be upset. But if the two girls had been on the Zambian side of that border, and gunned down by Rhodesian soldiers . . .?

Solzhenitsyn apparently understands his world, East and West. How many Western liberal groups have fired off telegrams to the Kremlin to defend his rights and the freedom of Sakharov?

The only 2 solutions we know to winter driving in Canada.

Before you spend money on a new car, think about where you and your new car will spend five months of each year.

In the snow. In the slush. In salt. In ice. In short, in the winter.

In its own unique way, the Beetle has easily made it through 21 Canadian winters.

For starters, it starts.

The VW's engine is air-cooled. Which means there's no radiator to freeze, no water to freeze, and of course, no anti-freeze. (Interestingly, tests prove that at some point even anti-freeze can freeze. But air can't.)

Moving right along, the VW's engine helps the VW move along in yet another way.

It helps to give you great traction that'll get you through snow, ice, mud and slush. Because while most people are putting sandbags and cinder blocks in the back of their cars above the drive wheels, we put our whole engine in the back. Above the drive wheels. That way the drive wheels can do what they're supposed to do. Drive.

If the Beetle is beginning to look a little more beautiful, its reassuring to know that its beauty is more than skin deep.

It's 4 coats of paint deep. Over 12 pound's worth.

Underneath, a sheet of steel protects the VW's vital parts against snow, ice and salt. Nothing's exposed. (The rods and cables for the gearshift, clutch, accelerator, handbrake and fuel line are snugly enclosed in a watertight steel compartment.)

To make sure you stay nice and snug, the Beetle has a large capacity heater with thoughtfully placed warm air outlets.

The rear window has an electric defogger and defrosting system* built in so you can always clearly see what's behind you. No matter how much it's snowing in front of you.

And because we build Volkswagens to make sure they'll go through many winters, the VW's warranty is longer than anybody else's except Rolls Royce. (24 months/24,000 miles.)

After getting you through the worst of a Canadian winter, it'll then get you through the best of a Canadian spring, summer and fall.

The Beetle's engine is in the back. It pushes you. You don't push it.

Housing Critics Meet

North Cowichan residents opposed to the giant Kingsview housing development planned for Mount Tzouhalem near Duncan will hold a public meeting Monday evening.

Spokesman Deane Russell said Friday the meeting, at 8 p.m. in the Cowichan senior high school at Duncan, will hear from a consulting engineer who will discuss the economic impact of large housing developments on taxpayers of a municipality.

The public meeting comes two days before North Cowichan council is scheduled to give final reading to a bylaw setting out an amended land use contract for the Kingsview project.

The developers plan to build 1,250 housing units on a 505-acre property, about three miles east of Duncan on the side of Mount Tzouhalem.

Opposing residents, who had the original land use contract quashed in B.C. Supreme Court last January, have battled the project through 17 hours of public hearings this year.

Among their arguments: A development the size of the one planned would destroy the rural atmosphere and overload public services.

Council has subsequently given three readings to a modified land use contract bylaw which Mayor Gerry Smith has said will give tighter control over the development.

Among the changes are a reduction of housing units from 1,350 to 1,250, all to be single family dwellings, a minimum lot size of 7,200 square feet, reduction of the commercial area from 10 acres to a small general store and a service station, set back to where town housing had been proposed, installation of a sewer system and more parkland. Kingsview has agreed to the changes.

Ian Stewart, Victoria lawyer who has acted for some of the opposing residents, said earlier there is no question in his mind the dispute will end up back in the courts.

Russell said Friday a delegation of 12 met three cabinet ministers last Wednesday to discuss various aspects of the Kingsview project.

Tranport Minister Robert Strachan, is MLA for Cowichan Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer and Bob Williams, minister of lands, forests and water resources, considered the issue sufficiently important to bring it before a full cabinet meeting next week, said Russell.

PROMISED CHILD SAID HAPPY IN BUSH HOME

SYDNEY, Australia (AP)—An Aboriginal girl who was taken from her white foster parents after six years and returned to her tribal family was reported today to be fairly happy in her "new" bush camp home.

Reporters who visited the aboriginal settlement 230 miles east of Darwin said seven-year-old Nola Granamba appeared puzzled by the change in life styles.

Her father told reoprters:

"We like Nola. We want her to stay here. She is our only daughter among six children."

The girl was taken from her foster parents, Athol and Ann Brown, in Darwin 14 days ago by officials of the federal government's aboriginal affairs department.

The Browns, who have six children of their own, said Nola had been promised by her parents since birth as a bride to a middle-aged man.

They said the husband-to-be had wanted to see his future bride for whom he was paying a bride price of food and tobacco.

Nola's father confirmed that Nola had been promised to his nephew as a bride, but the marriage would not take place for eight or 10 years. He also said his nephew is 21.

John Hunter, area supervisor of the aboriginal affairs department, said Nola had settled in well.

"She will not be forced to marry despite the promise," he said.

The girl was fostered out to the Browns when her natural mother was ill in hospital. Normally the maximum fostering period is six months.

Government officials are investigating why Nola was permitted to remain with her foster parents for so long.

Gutsy-Sexy Gals Have Message

By JEREMY BOULTBEE

There's something gutsy-sexy about a good-looking woman who can spit out the forbidden four-letter expletive while kicking her nimble gams over her head.

Indeed, a man could not really be blamed for commenting that all the members of Vancouver's Women's Action Theatre Group are damned appealing women.

But they have a message — so let's shelve this male hokum and get serious.

After all, the girls are.

Friday night this group of seven players put on two shorts — a play by Claire Woock with the titillating title of Titty-Titty-Bang-Bang, and a rather more sombre acted-out version of Sylvia Plath's Three Women — A Poem for Three Voices.

Good stuff, all of it, though the two were very different in tone, as the titles would indicate. As players, there can be no doubt whatever of the capability of this all-women group. But as for their message, maybe that's another thing.

Titty-Titty came to a definite point: Young virgins — and even older virginal minds — have an awful load of enculturated hog-wash dumped into their pretty little heads. Definitely time to rebel.

The play is extremely witty, and through it one sees most clearly many of the points of contention raised by women's movements today — or else one's an addle-pated clod.

But Sylvia Plath's work:

Frankly, this was a heavy trip. Not for one moment can one doubt the validity of Plath's own torment or depth of feeling in describing the emotions of three coping with pregnancy, childbirth, miscarriage.

Stemming from the one poetess' mind, such intricate stream of consciousness might more readily be, in fact, one woman and three voices — which is very likely more Plath than an unsuspecting audience might realize.

The piecg stood on its own — but by discussing it later, as was done, one came to realize (in my limited vision) that the young players were drumming home a rather sharply-angled viewpoint that one had to accept, or else . . .

There might be a lesson in this for the players that were trying so hard to teach a lesson to their audience: it is surely possible to be most profoundly affected by another's emotional experience without laboring through the discord of that emotion oneself.

Here I simply question the effect the tender years of these ladies can have upon a vastly more experienced audience.

Ferries Mismanaged: Case

An Esquimalt naval architect today accused the B.C. Ferry Authority of mismanagement and anti-Canadian attitudes in granting a ferry design contract to a Seattle firm.

John Case, president of Case Existological Laboratories, said Friday's announcement that a new ferry for the B.C. fleet would be designed by Spaulding and Nickum of Seattle was "unbelievable, unrealistic and embarrassing."

The contract, granted to Phillip Spaulding, the designer of the first two B.C. ferries, is estimated to be worth between $350,000 and $450,000.

"We have been denied an opportunity on two occasions to even present to the ferry authority at our own expense a proposal for the ships on their terms of reference," Case said today.

Case said in May, the ferry authority asked his company to supply an estimate of the cost of the vessel," but we were not allowed to make cost-cutting proposals or ideas for innovative features.

"In June, we heard through rumors, the Seattle firm was getting involved and we asked again for the authority's terms of reference for the ship so we could make a proposal — we were denied twice.

"Now we find out that the whole thing is simply a fait accompli."

Case said his firm and at least three other Canadian firms were well-equipped to handle the project.

"All we were told by Strachan (Transport Minister Bob Strachan) was that there wasn't time for us to get involved, but that's ridiculous."

Case said the only reason he could see for granting the contract to the Seattle architect was that he had designed earlier ships for the ferry authority.

"But we've done a lot of work for them too and we've built ferry passenger ships for every body of water in Canada except the Arctic Ocean."

Case said he had heard that the Seattle firm proposed safety cutbacks for the new ship to the ferry authority, but said those cutbacks were rejected by the Canadian Board of Steamship Inspectors in Ottawa.

"We've being told by the U.S. we may have huge oil tankers plying our waters and now they're telling us what kind of safety regulations we should have. The whole thing is just unbelieveable."

Case labelled the ferry authority's move as "anti-Canadian and said "we should wipe out people who don't think Canadian because they'll kill us."

Case is meeting Strachan Monday to register his protest against the move, but said he felt everything was "fait accompli, but we just can't keep quiet about something like this."

TEACHER SHIFTED FOR BLACK HUMOR

CALGARY (CP) — A public school teacher who referred to a black student as a "nigger" has been transferred to a non-teaching position for his "improper judgment", school trustee Catherine Martini said Friday.

"We took the action because it falls under the classification of misconduct — a severe error in judgment," she said in an interview.

The 13-year-old boy's mother, Mrs. Lareitta Jones, said her son Vince had come home crying and told her that his teacher had referred to him as "nigger".

Her son told her that during a mathematics class the teacher had reprimanded another student for being late adding that it appeared the student told time "just like a nigger . . . like Vince here."

Mrs. Jones said the teacher then related a "black" joke to the class.

"I'm shocked that a teacher, with some 43 years teaching experience, could stand before a class and say what he did."

The principal telephoned her and explained the situation and said the teacher wanted to apologize for his action, she said. The matter now is reasonably resolved, she said, adding that she is glad the board is aware of the situation.

Canada Duped: King

MOOSE JAW (CP) — Canadians have been duped for years by arguments about the irresponsibility of unions, Bill King, British Columbia labor minister, said here Friday.

He told a meeting sponsored by Moose Jaw NDP constituency associations that corporations, the media and most politicians consistently have said inflation is due to allegedly-irresponsible demands by unions for higher wages.

The government of British Columbia is dedicated to relaxing laws controlling working people so they can obtain the economic muscle necessary to keep pace with the cost of living, said King.

Unions are bounded by contracts, he said, but entrepreneurs are free to change their prices day by day.

King said the federal government feels it has control of the national economy but that if government members went into their consitituencies to talk with people, they would find inflation running uncontrolled.

"We can't introduce measures for the short term," said King. "We need changes in the economic structure."

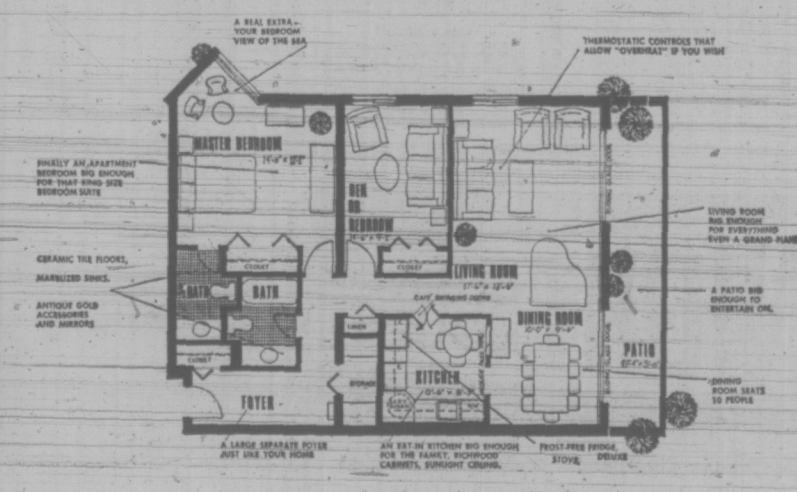
The Hotcake.
Our $47,500 Beach Drive Apartment
that's selling like there's no tomorrow



Sure this apartment would sell like a "Hotcake" anywhere — but put it on Beach Drive in Oak Bay where the high cost of land doesn't usually allow for so much space and value at such a moderate price — and you can really see what the excitement is all about.

And there's even more to the Hotcake than the floor plan shows. Like undercover electronically secured parking for each and every apartment, laundries on every floor, EVEN room for freezers. And a sauna, a therapeutic pool, exercise pavillion, plus a hobby room.

But that's not all. The Royal Alexander has three other one and two bedroom models from just $29,900 to $51,500.

NO THREAT FROM OIL IN GEORGIA STRAIT

Rescue officials in Vancouver today said the long tendrils of oil sighted Thursday scattered in the Strait of Georgia between Nanaimo and Vancouver contained light diesel oil and posed no threat to the environment.

Department of transport sent a coast guard to the scene Friday to gather a sample.

Officials said the oil was breaking up and starting to precipitate.

Source of the oil slick has not been determined.

Queen's Hair Tips Bogus Bill

Victoria City Police Friday warned residents to be on the lookout for a picture of Queen Elizabeth with messy hair.

The Queen's picture appears on $100 bills and the messy hair indicated the bill is phoney.

Police said a new series of counterfeit $100 bills from a 1954 series are now circulating in Quebec and Saskatchewan and are probably headed to Victoria.

Police said they do not believe the phoney $100 bills are connected to the more than 70 phoney $50 bills passed in Victoria during the last 10 weeks.

So far, the counterfeit $100 bills carry the serial numbers B-J 6621214, B-J 2507177 and A-J 4530408.

Police said although the bills are good reproductions, several discrepancies distinguish them from regular bills.

'Conservative' Teachers Deplored

Greater Victoria school board chairman Peter Bunn today criticized "conservative teachers who don't use the freedom they have now."

"There are so many incredibly conservative teachers," he said, "and we crave teachers to explore a little outside their conservative role."

Bunn's comments were motivated by a report Thursday of a speech by the board's special counsellor Pat McCarthy in which she said "teachers get locked into the curriculum."

McCarthy told a Status of Women Action Group meeting "they (teachers) say the curriculum says I have to teach this so I have to teach it.

"They're not free enough to move away from what's been laid down without the protrction of the law," she said, adding legislation to change the school system is necessary for long-term change in education.

Without the protection of the law, she added, teachers are too afraid to move away from the curriculum.

But Bunn said:

"Not in 10 years has the board turned down any application for inventive instruction ideas."

He said the curriculum is only a framework, or guide, and "teachers have great freedom of movement. To suggest they are strapped down bothered me.

"If there's one thing we ask, it's for teachers to broaden" their scope, he said.

EGG PRICE UP AGAIN

A one cent a dozen increase in the price of Grade A large and medium eggs has been announced by the B.C. Egg Marketing Board.

The wholesale price is now 82 cents a dozen.

Prices of small eggs and other grades will increase three cents a dozen. The increases are the second this week.

Board secretary-manager Ed Morgan said the increase is being made because of a $5-a-ton increase in feed prices in the last week.

Morgan said the board has called on the feed companies to explain the reasons for any future feed price increases.

On Monday the board increased the price by two and three cents a dozen on different grades of eggs.

Building Firm Sold

Stewart and Hudson Ltd. and associated retail stores has been bought from Geoffrey J. Stewart of Victoria by Revelstoke Companies Ltd. of Calgary.

Stewart said Friday the principal reason for the sale was he has only a year or two before retirement.

"I was anxious to see the firm under good management," he said. "I believe it was an excellent decision to make."

The companies acquired operate eight retail home improvement and building supplies outlets in the province. Combined sales exceed $8 million.

Revelstoke owns 100 retail improvement and building supply outlets, 18 concrete plants in western Canada and five lumber mills in B.C. and Alberta.

Revelstoke's president, Steele Curry, said Friday his company does not plan any management changes.

The Victoria firm was formerly jointly owned by Stewart and Ernest Hudson. The latter retired in 1966.

The company has six stores on Vancouver Island — Victoria, Nanaimo, Duncan, Port Alberni, Parksville and Ladysmith. The associated companies operate stores in Surrey and White Rock.

Stewart and Hudson employes about 100 people in its stores.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A Saanich man will spend the next 45 weekends in jail after pleading guilty to contributing to the delinquency of a juvenile.

Police said William Howard Lacroix, 37, was boarding in a Saanich home June 23. The owner of the house was out for the night and Lacroix was alone with four children between the ages of eight and 13, including his own son.

Police said the man gave alcohol to two of the children and then induced an eight-year-old girl to go upstairs with him.

Lacroix asked Judge William Ostler in Victoria provincial court Friday to impose a weekend jail sentence so he could keep his family together.

Ostler imposed an 18 months probation term to follow the jail sentence.

Gordon Howard Harris, 21, of no fixed address, was sentenced to five months in jail after he pleaded guilty to driving while prohibited, failing to remain at the scene of an accident and prowling around a private house at night.

Harris was involved in a minor motor vehicle accident Aug. 31, police said. He got out of his car after the accident, but then got back in and drove away. He was stopped by police on Fort Street where it was found he had had his licence supsended earlier.

The prowl by night charge arose Sept. 5 after Harris was seen around a house on Montrose Avenue. A two-year driving ban was imposed to start after the jail sentence.

Dennis Laverty, of Lloydminster, Alta, was fined $50 after he pleaded guilty to obtaining food and lodging by fraud.

Police said Laverty, who stayed at a Gorge Road motel from Feb. 21 - March 1, left without paying his bill of $116.35.

Laverty told the court he had since made restitution to the motel owners.

Ronald A. Glass, 35, of 2219 Shakespeare, was sentenced to 30 days in jail after he pleaded guilty to possession of hashish.

Glass was searched by police on Government Street Wednesday and police found a pipe and a small amount of hashish.

BAY DAY IS COMING!

Sale priced 29.88

Take it from a bird who knows.

There are some very warm birds in Canada who could teach you a lot about keeping warm. The waterfowl. The waterfowl's natural down is the ultimate insulation — bar none.
Unlike synthetic insulators that form bulky matts, pure down feathers cling together gently — forming the "dead air" space that is the focus of all insulation. At the same time, down feathers "breathe" — taking away excess body moisture. The result is maximum warmth, minimum weight, and the finest insulation known to man. (Take it from a very warm bird.)

Down-filled jackets are the waterfowl's gift to man . . . and the sale price is our gift to you! These super smart nylon shelled jackets have 2-way zippers, wind-cheating knitted cuffs and collars and hidden hoods. In three fashion-right colours even Nature would envy: navy, royal blue or red. Sizes S.M.L.XL.

Once Again James Bay To Debate Its Rezoning

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Less than half a square mile in total area, but the centre of more controversy and debate than any other residential district in Victoria, James Bay comes under the spotlight again next Wednesday.

That's when the complex task of rezoning almost the entire area gets underway with the first of a series of public hearings, which are expected to draw large numbers of James Bay residents to City Hall.

To avoid conflict with working hours and encourage maximum attendance, city council has changed its usual schedule and decreed that the hearing be held in the evening.

The rezoning proposals seek to implement the broad policies outlined in the 1973 James Bay Study, by shifting the emphasis away from extensive redevelopment to the encouragment of neighborhood preservation and limited population density.

City planning staff began preparatory work several months ago, and from the outset it was agreed the magnitude of the rezoning task was such that the only sensible way of tackling it was to carve James BJay into several manageable chunks and deal with each individually.

First of the five stages to be considered at next Wednesday's public hearing, proposes an end to highrise (R3H) zoning in four separate pockets: along the Douglas frontage between Avalon and Simcoe; property in the central-Simcoe area facing Rendall Street; between Dallas and Rithet; and the St. Andrew's-Simcoe-Avalon block.

The first three are to be rezoned to medium-density (R3) use tnd the fourth to duplex (R2).

Adding to the massive amount of paper work involved in the city staff's preparations has been the recent amendment to the Municipal Act requiring affected property occupiers, as well as owners, to be personally notified of rezoning proposals.

For Stage I alone, the city clerk's staff mailed out 1,553 notifications and the total for Stage II will be over 2,000.

As an informational prelude to Wednesday's hearing, the James Bay Community Association is sponsoring a public meeting at the Newcombe Auditorium starting at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Guest speakers will include city planning director Geoff Greenhalgh, who will explain the background to the rezoning and how the proposals will affect the area's future; and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials who will discuss the federal government's new program designed to encourage rehabilitation of neighborhood areas.

The public hearing on Wednesday starts at 8 p.m.

HIGH SEAS MUSTS

Rat Traps and a Machete

By DOREEN HUNTER

If you're planning to sail the high seas, rat traps, a chopping block and machete are handy things to take along, says Frank Lane, owner of the 45-foot ketch Evviva.

The ex-construction foreman is aboard his boat at Fishermen's Wharf in Sidney after a 14-month trip to the South Pacific.

The machete is a must for cracking open coconuts, he reports.

A bicycle and Eric Hiscock's Voyaging Under Sail can also come in useful.

Petty thieves find oarlocks irresistible, says Lane, so take along some spares.

Stock plenty of antibiotics in the medicine chest. For some reason, skin wounds take longer to heal at sea.

If you're planning to head for the South seas, do it now, says Lane, don't wait.

Build your boat, or buy her. Sail her up and down the West Coast. Try her out in all kinds of weather — then go.

"I should have done it 15 years ago," says the skipper.

Lane started collecting ships' fittings 20 years ago. He took two years to build Evviva, launching her in 1971.

After some dummy runs he set sail July 1, 1972, with a crew of four, heading for Lahaina in the Victoria-Maui race.

Gear failure forced Evviva out of the race. After a stop in San Diego, Lane and his crew took off again, cruising to the Marquesas, Tahiti, the Cook Islands and New Zealand.

Lane says Evviva is "exceptional going to windward." She has seven berths and a 12-foot beam. A 55-horsepower diesel engine augments her sails. She made the 2,300-mile leg from Pangopango to Hawaii in 25 days.

A five-day stretch of being becalmed was one of the few drawbacks of the whole trip.

Highlights included hunting wild pigs, feasts of turtle steak and soup, and swimming with porpoises.

Outstanding memories include discovery of deserted islands, their virgin beaches strewn with thousands of shells, and a "moon bow" arcing the night sky over Tulaulia Bay in the Fiji Islands.

After a winter layover, Lane says he'll probably head for the Queen Charlottes. Evviva, which means good cheer, will be scraped and painted before she leaves.

Lane warns that if you're heading south it's best to take off before September to avoid the dirty weather that can whip up in the Pacific during the winter months.

Hunting Wild Pigs, And Feasts Of Turtle Steak

"Crew trouble," says Lane, is a common and hard-to-solve problem on ocean-going trips, compounded by confined quarters and varying personalities.

"Both Jennifer and Richard turned out to be good sailors," he concedes.

The solution, he suggests, is to confine the crew to skipper and spouse.

LANE . . . do it now, don't wait

Elford Is Insisting On Full Hunt Ban

The chairman of the regional board's parks committee said today she finds "completely unacceptable" a provincial government proposal to allow even limited hunting in giant East Sooke Park.

Frances Elford said she told Recreation Minister Jack Radford this in a telephone discussion of the issue Friday, adding she was "very disappointed" with the compromise he is considering.

She said Radford confirmed what he told the Times Thursday, that he is considering reducing the period shotguns only would be allowed for hunting in the park to one month — Nov. 1 to Dec. 2.

A decision on that will be made before Oct. 1, when current regulations would allow hunting in the park for a three or four-month period.

Radford told her he is considering assigning a conservation officer to monitor use of the park by hunters and hikers during the month open for hunting to assess the degree of conflict."

But Elford argues this cannot give an accurate picture because hikers and families using the park for outings will simply stay away when they learn the park is open to hunting through November.

The regional board wants a year-round firearms ban in the 4,000-acre park, as do a number of outdoor organizations. Radford has said that the interests of hunters must be considered as well when a park the size of East Sooke is being considered.

At present hunting in the park is regulated by the province and there is a difference of opinion between Elford and Radford on what the current regulations say.

Radford said Thursday shooting is permitted for only three months, October to the end of December.

But Elford said today an order-in-council, dated March 16, is specific, allowing shooting in the park from Oct. 1 to the end of January — four months.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell told Radford in a letter Thursday: "my board has been virtually deluged with letters from groups and individuals protesting these regulations."

Elford said Radford is wrong if he thinks there are as many hunters as hikers and picnickers interested in East Sooke Park.

The park is the only major one within a half-hour's drive of Greater Victoria and the regional board has developed a network of trails through it as an open invitation to hikers, she said.

There is ample territory elsewhere on the Island for hunters which has not been developed for hikers, she said.

She repeated regional board staff will begin an examination next week for authority the board may have to block any hunting in the park.

Junior Achievers Oct. 1

The Junior Achievement program to teach business to young people starts Oct. 1 at Dean Heights School, Richmond Road.

Meetings will be held three nights a week — Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays — from 7 to 9 p.m. They are open to Grades 10, 11 and 12 pupils.

Junior Achievement will also hold a dance Oct. 5 at the YMCA, starting at 8 p.m.

Charge Changed To Capital Murder

A charge of capital murder was read in Victoria provincial court this morning against Clifford Earle Clark following the death Friday of Mrs. Freda Helen Eveleigh.

The 56-year-old Saanich woman died at 1:35 p.m. in Royal Jubilee Hospital. Her death came 11 days after she had been shot in the head while sitting in her car in the Hillside shopping plaza parking lot.

Clark, 65, of 121 Kamloops, stood quietly in court, his head downcast, as the new charge was read.

A retired builder, he had been charged with attempted murder the day after Mrs. Eveleigh was shot. He was released on $12,000 bail awaiting a preliminary hearing set for Dec. 4 and 5 before Judge William Ostler.

Bail has now been revoked.

Judge F. S. Green remanded him in custody to Sept. 28 or until the Supreme Court approves a new application for bail.

It is understood defence lawyer Cecil Branson will apply in Supreme Court for bail probably Wednesday.

Mrs. Eveleigh, who resided at 3755 Seaton, had just come out of a health spa and was sitting in her car when a man approached with a revolver and shot twice.

Police said only one bullet hit her.

Police said she never regained consciousness after speaking a few words following the shooting.

Ask The Times

Q. Is there a paper published by the Indian Brotherhood in B.C. and-or in other provinces? G.B.

A. The Native Brocherhood of B.C. publishes a newspaper, The Native Voice, which appears monthly. The address for it is Room 517, 193 East Hastings, Vancouver. A source there advises there are quite a number of newspapers published by a variety of Indian groups across Canada.

VETERANS 'DUBIOUS'

The prospect that the federal Veterans Hospital in Victoria will soon be turned over to the province has raised again the concern of veterans that their hospital care may be curtailed.

Ivan Smith, president of the Pro Patria branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, said today there are about 100 signatures on a petition which will be forwarded to local members of Parliament.

Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Friday transfer of the Veterans Hospital is close and an agreement could be concluded by January.

Through the years in which the issue has periodically surfaced, the federal government has made it clear veterans must be assured care before hospitals operated by the department of veterans affairs across the country will be turned over to the provinces.

While the draft agreement currently being completed between B.C. and Ottawa is understood to guarantee veterans' care, Smith said: "There are a lot of people who are a little dubious."

Veterans are particularly concerned about getting continued domiciliary care, he said. With domiciliary care, patients in effect live in the hospital.

Meanwhile, Art Young, chairman of the Capital region hospital board, said addition of the 265-bed Veterans Hospital, located alongside Royal Jubilee Hospital, will not change things overnight.

But it would provide a location for patients at Victoria General Hospital while the major renivations needed there get under way.

And it will enable Royal Jubilee Hospital to develop more fully a master plan, he said.

Sand in the Rug, Salt on the Windows

THERE'S NO TEACHER like experience for those capable of learning, and our years as owners of a waterfront property in Gordon Head taught us a number of useful lessons. The sum of these is that anyone who buys a place on the beach is some kind of nut.

We reminded ourselves and each other of that fact at frequent intervals when we decided on a change of location. Our up-Island home might have a sea view, but it would be located a comfortable distance inland.

"You know," I would remark as we set out on a round of house-viewing, "the oldtimers had sense. They didn't live right at the edge of tidewater. They picked a nice sheltered location where the earth would grow stuff and the gales didn't salt up their windows."

On the way back to the beach-hugging motel that was our headquarters, we'd review the properties we had inspected. All had sheltered locations, flourishing gardens, and unsalted glass windows.

"That Cape Cod had a wonderful kitchen," my dear one might say, or, "I liked the split-level ranch with the flagstone patio. But I don't think either of them is quite right for us."

This nit-picking continued until we faced the inevitable. We were longshore people, members of a wrongheaded clan that must have salt on the window glass and seagulls on the roof tree, and we might as well quit struggling against our fate.

With that dismaying truth accepted, we acquired our present abode. It stands directly in the path of the southeasters. We have seriously considered naming it "Below Tide."

Once in a while we are descended upon by guests who are also cursed with beach rat instincts. They carry rubber boots as standard equipment in their car trunks. If one of them spots a slab of fir bark or a useful end of plank in the tideline clutter, he automatically beachcombs it. He may admire the view, but his attention centres on other aspects of waterfront life.

He may ask how our fireplace behaves when the wind is up, or hold forth on the virtues of seaweed as fertilizer.

There's no point in telling a visitor of this stamp that life on a lee shore has its rarely-publicized drawbacks. The chances are strong that he is already aware of them.

Those who aren't—which is to say, most of the visitors who gaze out at a blue-satin sea and ask if we know of waterfront land for sale at a reasonable price—would be wise to look before they leap.

First comes the matter of cost. A lot on the beach, even if it's only a patch of sand and sea oats, is going to carry a premium price tag.

To the purchase price, add an assessment that will guarantee considerably higher property tax than would be levied on an inland tract of comparable size.

The house you build on it will pose specialized maintenance problems. Those bracing, salt-laden breezes that tingle the skin and expand the lungs can play the very devil with house paint and any metal less than fully corrosion-proof.

The welcome coolness of saltwater summer may be offset for at least nine months of the year by larger heating bills.

There are other and more serious drawbacks. Unless your shoreline is composed of solid rock, waterfront living remains a gamble. the sea is constantly re-arranging its margins.

In fact, that changeable sea can become an enemy of terrifying strength and destructive potential.

It can turn dry land—your precious land—into drift-littered beach. One bad storm can shatter a concrete breakwater or wipe out a rampart of chained and pile-driven logs that has defied the waves for years.

Gardening becomes a struggle against an environment hostile to land-based life, and even if you shed your boots at the back door, sharp-edged grains of sand will go to work on your carpets.

In two months or three, I will probably be brooding over these considerations and wondering if the next wind-hounded crester will dump a few tons of unordered firewood on our struggling grass.

But right now it is time to knock off for our mid-morning coffee. We will stroll with our mugs to the beach, and sit on a sun-warmed log. The mainland peaks will their heads above September haze. Perhaps the neighborhood seal will haul out on a tide-bared rock. In the shallows, a heron will be fishing.

And as longshore dwellers, we will be aware that life has nothing better to offer.

IMF, World Bank Talks Can Really Affect Jobs

By HOBART ROWEN
Washington Post

NAIROBI, Kenya — Why is the somewhat arcane subject of international monetary reform important to the average person?

The answer is — jobs. For all of the talk of SDRs, exchange rates, and dollar convertibility, the important thing to remember as the World Bank and International Monetary Fund meetings begin here is that trade and investment tie the economies of the major industrial nations close together.

In a direct way the access of one country to another nation's markets, and the impact of that invasion on national prosperity, is what the Nairobi negotiations and trade talks which recently started in Tokyo are all about.

Thus the cost of producing goods in Europe and Japan for sale in the U.S. and in third markets has been rising rapidly as wages move up toward the American standard. That process was drastically hastened by two dollar devaluations in 14 months and upward revaluations of other currencies, notably of the D-mark and the Japanese yen, that gave U.S. goods a big edge.

The other nations have been willing to see the dollar value move down some, so as to create a trade surplus, out of which they might some day be paid back for the surplus dollars they hold (estimated to be $90 billion).

But obviously the realignment of currencies in favor of the U.S. can go too far for the others, throwing their own payment ledgers into deficit and creating unemployment problems of their own. (The German D-mark has been upvalued 64 per cent since the end of 1968, making car exporters there wonder if they can compete.)

And the dollar can depreciate too far to be healthy for the U.S. Americans have already had an object lesson this year on what devaluation means to their own pocketbooks. It used to be argued (in fact, President Nixon said as much when announcing the first devaluation in August, 1971) that only tourists and others spending money abroad would really be affected.

But it is clear that the devaluation gave a big thrust to inflation here, raising the prices of imported commodities and also making it profitable for foreigners (with more valuable currencies) to make heavy purchases here (notably of food) and to make even bigger capital investments.

Thus Americans have learned the hard way since August, 1971, that the value of their dollars at home has an intimate relationship to the international exchange value of currencies. The impact of devaluations and revaluations may come with a delay, but they are nonetheless a major economic force.

Nairobi will provide an important test of whether the major nations can work cooperatively together, or whether they will split up into competitive blocs seeking to protect their export markets.

They will be tested also for their ability to share the wealth with the less developed nations of the world, which continue to fall behind.

There may be evidence too of the willingness of the West to let the East join the party. In a world brought together by technological advances it makes little sense to have one monetary system for the non-Communist world and another for other ideologies.

The French seem to be in the vanguard of pushing the idea that as trade grows between East and West, so should monetary co-operation. In the far-off future, one can visualize making it possible for Russia and other eastern nations to join the IMF and the World Bank. But the overtures would have to come from the West.

House Insurer Sells Escalating Policy

TORONTO (CP) — With spiraling inflation, chances are you haven't got sufficient insurance money to rebuild a burned-out house.

Halifax Insurance Co., one of Canada's oldest, has announced a policy that will be linked to construction costs, and as they rise so will the amount insured.

"It was clear that many policyholders were under-insured," said Hugh Kay, vice-president.

Under the new full-coverage policy, a residential property owner will have monthly increases in building costs matched automatically by increases in the amount covered by the policy.

Fire insurance will be linked to Statistics Canada's monthly index of labor and materials for residential construction.

Montrealers Can Dabble In Raising Beef for $600

MONTREAL (CP) — For homemakers fed up with the rising cost of beef or for city dwellers interested in dabbling in raising beef, two Montreal men have come up with a scheme to provide beef at about $1 a pound.

For $600 Live Stock Management Associates Ltd. will buy a three-month-old calf fatten it up for eight months, slaughter it and deliver 600 pounds of meat in the form of roasts, steaks and ground beef ready for home freezing.

Jim Lewis, president of Provincial Calf Feeds and Provincial Veal Co. Ltd., and Andre Leveillee, along with three Montreal businessmen, recently set up the firm and have about 20 calves in the process of fattening.

"As far as we know, there is no other program like this in North America," says Lewis, whose feed firm provides the special "high-conversion" feed which puts about 700 pounds on the calves in eight months.

"Up until now we've been preparing thousands of calves for export" to Europe and the U.S. where they are put on fattening programs, Lewis said. But with the rising cost of beef in Canada, they turned to the domestic market.

"We just feel the timing is right."

People who sign a contract with the firm, will pay $300 down and supply six postdated $50 cheques to cover the cost of housing, feeding and slaughtering the animal.

The price also includes insurance against the death of the calf or damage during transport.

Last Saturday Live Stock Management's first 20 contract calves were moved into a barn in St. Mathias, Que., about 15 miles southeast of Montreal in the Richelieu valley.

There they are to be raised under a "meat factory" system used in Japan, says Mr. Lewis.

The animals are kept indoors and fed only the "high conversion feed"—three pounds of feed will put one pound on the animal—and water.

The result is "extremely tender beef because the cattle can't move around," he said. The cattle, slaughtered in federally-approved slaughterhouses, will produce either grade A or grade B beef under the federal classification.

Lewis feels the market for his scheme is vast and says he could place 4,000 calves in barns throughout Quebec easily. Live Stock Management associates expects to take about six per cent of each transaction to cover administration and profit.

"It's going to have to be a volume business if it is going to be of any value to us," Lewis says, adding that repeat business will also be an important factor.

His Provincial Calf Feed firm supplies the special feed for which it has the Canadian rights.

Lewis says a tone of the feed, developed abroad, contains barley and corn and 800 pounds of concentrates. He hastily added there are no hormones in the feed.

Lewis says the scheme can offer more than simply a way for families to reduce their food costs.

"Other people are interested in buying three or four as an investment.

"We raise them and sell them for them and they get a return of about 20 per cent" when the slaughtered beef is sold at wholesale prices.

The system, which uses Quebec-bred Holstein calves, "has been in the making for several months" and Mr. Leveillee and Lewis hope to reach a large market through contacting consumer groups, unions or other associations.

Olive Oil Spurts Ahead 20% in Spain

MADRID (AP) — A new price problem jolted the government's fight on inflation Thursday as a staple of Spanish cooking, olive oil, shot up more than 20 per cent overnight. Speculation, a shortage of reserve stocks and the expired U.S. ban on soybean exports were blamed.

Waste Charges Partisan—Drury

OTTAWA (UPI) — Renewed charges of the government's waste and extravagance made by former auditor general Maxwell Henderson are "rather partisan," C. M. Bud Drury, chairman of the treasury board, said today.

Henderson, highly critical of government spending throughout his career as auditor general, retired and was replaced by James Johnson MacDonnell, senior partner of Price Waterhouse Associates, a Montreal firm of chartered accountants.

He renewed his criticism in an article published this summer by Macleans magazine.

"I would suggest that the charges of waste, corruption and extravagance tend to be rather partisan. The place where they should be examined is within the parliamentary structure and this we do," Drury said in a weekend interview on the CTV network program "Question Period."

Drury said he hoped for a "less confrontational" relationship with MacDonnell. He blamed Henderson himself for the harassment" and undermining of the auditor general's office alleged by Henderson.

He said that while Henderson complained many of his senior employees had their salaries "red-circled" — or frozen — and tended to seek higher salaries in other departments, Henderson asked for employees at specific levels.

Drury was unwilling to admit any concern over the growth of the civil service in recent years, but did complain some departments — he specifically mentioned the post office — had been "undermanaged," resulting in no improvement to their productivity.

He rejected charges that increases in remuneration were going to civil servants in middle and higher salary brackets rather than to those at lower levels.

Drury said the increases of three, two and two per cent over a three-year contract offered recently to government clerks, for example, should be seen as a first offer by management and not a final settlement.

Professionals in the civil service were recently given an 11 per cent increase over a two-year contract.

Drury said there had to be a "bit of posturing" in the bargaining process.

He said that over the past five years the actual spread between salaries at the higher and lower levels had actually been "noticeably narrowed."

The treasury board chairman did admit the civil service might appear overstaffed because it was staffed to meet "peak circumstances."

He would not admit the situation was in any sense "out of control," but added, "it doesn't mean that it's not a difficult task."

U.S. Officials Critical Of Canadian Beef Tariff

WASHINGTON (CP) — United States officials criticized Friday the reimposition of the Canadian beef tariff but admitted the levy probably won't make much difference in the cattle traffic betfeen the two countries.

The state department, which reacted bitterly a week ago when Canada raised the export price on oil, had no complaint about this latest move.

"Not another tariff," one state department official said.

"You put on an oil levy to keep the Canadian price down. Now it appears you've put on a levy to keep a Canadian price up."

However, where the oil increase came as a shock to the U.S. government, reinstitution of the beef tariff was no surprise.

"We knew it was coming," an official for thhe agriculture department said.

"There have been indications the Canadians might do this."

The tariff — three cents a pound on beef and 1.5 cents on live cattle — was dropped by the Canadian government last February. It was reimposed, effective today.

In making the announcement, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said the recent U.S. freeze on beef prices, since lifted, produced "a distortion" in the Canadian market and said "cattlemen must be given confidence that they can produce a profit in Canada."

Lately, with U.S. prices lower than those in Canada, thousands of cattle have been shipped into Canada from the U.S., putting strong "downward pressure" on prices there.

Whelan said that if the U.S. — which has a similar tariff on Canadian beef — were to drop its levy, Canada will review the situation.

A U.S. agriculture department official said that while the reimposed tariff should not make any difference — "or anyway, not much" — in the current cattle traffic, "probably what it might mean is that any increase in such trade might be slowed down."

"Since the U.S. hasn't taken her tariff off, this equalizes the duty. It, basically, sort of puts things back in balance," he said.

Price Spin to Taper

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House says the latest jump in the cost of living is only temporary, and prices should soon taper off "to a reasonable level" under President Nixon's anti-inflation programs.

However, Friday's report that consumer prices climbed another 1.8 per cent in August prompted sharp criticism of Nixon's economic programs by AFL-CIO President George Meany.

Meany said the figures are "complete proof of the utter incompetence of this administration."

The 1.8-per-cent increase —actually a 1.9-per-cent rise on a seasonally adjusted basis — was the largest in 26 years, propelled by a six-per-cent increase in the price of food last month.

The government said these food-price increases, especially sharp increases for pork, poultry and eggs, accounted for about 80 per cent of the August increase.

Saskatchewan Rolls Back Milk Prices Three Cents

REGINA (CP) — Retail milk prices in Saskatchewan will be rolled back three cents a quart effective Monday, Agriculture Minister Jack Messer announced Friday.

He said the roll-back is the result of an agreement between the federal and provincial governments and the Saskatchewan Milk Control Board regarding the application of the federal milk price subsidy of five cents a quart.

Retail prices will continue at the lower level even though payments to producers will rise to $8.80 a hundredweight Jan. 1 from $7.85.

The price-reduction agreement will hold for one year although discussions on it may reopen if the industry faces unexpected cost increases, he said.

Saskatchewan mill prices were recently increased two cents to produce a retail price of 38 cents a quart.

EDMONTON (CP) — Robert D'Esterre, assistant deputy minister in the department of manpower and labor, has been reappointed chairman of the Board of Industrial Relations.

The appointments, effective Oct. 1, include: Dr. C. Brian Williams of Edmonton as vice-chairman; William N. Gray of Edmonton; E. Stanley Unsley of Edmonton; Eric Dahli of Calgary; Leo Chikinda of Calgary; Frank Kuzemski of Edmonton; and Orest Demco of Calgary.

CHURCHILL, Man. (CP) — Grain shipments from the port of Churchill and stocks on hand this year reflect the result of the recent nationwide rail strike, port manager Earl Scarth said Thursday.

He noted shipments from the port are running about one million bushels behind last year and that grain stocks on hand are about three million bushels less than in September last year.

Six Russian ships now are in port with four loading and two waiting to be loaded, Scarth said. Five more Russian vessels and one British ship are expected before the port closes for the winter.

REGINA (CP) — The continuing legal and political dispute over Regina's 1961 community planning scheme spilled over into Court of Queen's Bench Thursday, where shopping centre developers sought a court order to force the city to give them a building permit.

City officials indicated that they want to issue the permit only on the orders of a court so that they are protected against lawsuits if the centre has to be torn down.

In the background of the courtroom debate was conflict between the 1961 scheme — which requires provincial approval to be changed — and later city zoning bylaws.

NDPer Raps NDP

SASKATOON (CP) — An NDP member of the Saskatchewan Legislature does not want the provincial government "to sit on its rear end and do nothing" to offset cost-of-living increases for low-income families and persons on fixed incomes.

Herman Rolfes, member for Saskatoon Nutana South, said in an interview the federal government should give money to the provinces and allow them to solve the problem.

Happy Event Becomes Tragedy

SYDNEY (UPI) — A young schoolgirl, excited by word that her mother had given birth to triplets, ran into the street to spread the news today and was killed by a car near her home.

Gay Fieldus, eight, died after an emergency operation in Sydney. She was sped 100 miles from another hospital in her hometown of Norwa, doctors said.

Her mother, Mrs. Pam Fieldus, gave birth to two girls and a boy at Norwa Friday on her 40th birthday. The woman went into shock and was placed under sedation when told of the accident, a hospital spokesman said.

Gay was returning home with her brother, Wayne, 13, on a bus. Her grandmother said the girl had been excited about the birth of the triplets all day.

When she stepped from the bus, she ran around in back of the vehicle to meet her father, Colin, and sister, Janice, 16, who were waiting for Gay and her brother. Wayne tried to stop Gay from dashing across the road, they said.

A car struck her as she ran from behind the bus. The child was rushed to Shoalhaven Hospital, where the triplets had been born. She was later rushed to the Sydney hospital, but doctors were unable to save her.

SIGN OF THE TIMES greets Pittsburgh Pirate pitcher Steve Blass (28) as he leaves mound and heads for dugout. New York Mets struck for four runs in first inning to force his departure in National League baseball game at New York. Mets went on to win 10-2.—(AP Wirephoto).

Mets Step to Top; Expos Bow Again

By The Associated Press

New York Mets soared into first place in the National League East Division Friday night on a wing and a prayer and several hard-hit baseballs.

The wing was Tom Seaver's right arm which held the touted Pittsburgh offence to one triple and four singles.

The prayer came from shortstop Bud Harrelson who kept chanting, "We've got to keep winning, we've just got to keep winning. There are still five teams in this thing. We've got to keep winning."

Cleon Jones, Jerry Grote, John Milner, Wayne Garrett and Rusty Staub accounted for the hardest of New York's 13 base hits in a 10-2 victory.

It was the fourth straight New York triumph over Pittsburgh and vaulted the Mets into first place for the first time since May 2. Their lead is less than secure, however, as four other clubs are within 2½ games of the top.

EXPOS 1½ BACK

The Pirates are one-half game back, third-place St. Louis Cardinals are one game behind, fourth-place Montreal Expos are 1½ games off the pace and fifth-place Chicago Cubs are 2½ games back. The Cardinals clubbed Philadelphia Phillies 12-3, the Cubs topped the Expos 3-1, Cincinnati Reds beat Los Angeles Dodgers 4-1 in 12 innings and San Diego Padres split a pair with San Francisco Giants, the Padres winning 3-1 and losing 7-2, in other National League games.

The Mets' rise to the top was witnessed by the largest Shea Stadium crowd of the season— 51,381 noisy fans—many of whom arrived late due to a giant traffic jam outside the park.

Those who got there early saw the Mets score four times in the first inning with Jones and Grote driving in two runs apiece with doubles. Milner, Garrett and Staub added home runs later as six Pirate pitchers got into the action.

Seaver's mound opponent was Steve Blass, suffering through a 3-9 season. Blass sounded like a winner—"I was throwing good stuff, I had my control"—but lasted just 2-3 of an inning. Seaver sounded like a loser—"I was struggling all the way. I didn't really have very good stuff"—but struck out eight batters en route to his 18th win against 10 losses.

NOT SURPRISED

Met Manager Yogi Berra, whose job was reportedly in jeopardy not long ago, said he wasn't surprised by his club's dramatic rise from last to first.

"I never thought we were really out of it," said Berra. "You're never out of it until it's mathematical."

Pittsburgh manager Danny Murtaugh managed to find a silver lining in an otherwise dark cloud.

"We're still one up in the loss column," grumbled Murtaugh. "That makes us the team to beat, right?"

If the Pirates are the team to beat, the Mets are the team to do it. New York has won 13 of 18 meetings with Pittsburgh this season. The Mets have eight games left to play, Pittsburgh has 10, and St. Louis, Montreal and Chicago have nine.

WISE WINS

St. Louis right-hander Rick Wise made his first appearance in Philadelphia since the Phils traded him last season for Steve Carlton. Wise celebrated his return by picking up his first victory since Aug. 5 to raise his record to 14-1.

The Cards backed Wise with 17 base hits, three each by Ted Sizemore, Bake McBride and Ted Simmons.

The Cardinals move into New York today for a two-game series with the Mets.

"We're playing well, like a club that can win the National League pennant," said Chicago manager Whitey Lockman. "I think our club's experience and maturity will be an advantage in this type of pressure finish."

The Cubs made it four straight victories while the young Expos staggered to their fifth consecutive loss. Gonzalo Marquez homered for the Cubs and Burt Hooton picked up his 14th win with relief help from Bob Locker.

Montreal continues to find new ways to lose. In the fifth, the Expos got four straight hits but failed to score, and in the eighth Mike Jorgensen led off with a triple and was left on base.

George Foster tied the game with a ninth-inning homer for Cincinnati and Tony Perez won it with a three-run shot in the 10th. It was the fifth hit for Perez.

The Reds now lead the second-place Dodgers by 5½ games in the National League West.

Clarence Gaston's two-run homer gave San Diego the opening game while rookie John D'Acquisto pitched his first major league victory for San Francisco in the nightcap. The first game loss mathematically eliminated the Giants from the National League West race.

Close Call for Leaders

Reynolds and Mount Douglas remained undefeated in the Greater Victoria High School Soccer League Friday but for both schools it was a close call.

Mt. Doug scored its third straight victory, edging the defending-champion Oak Bay squad 1-0 in the evening game at Royal Athletic Park.

And Reynolds needed a second-half penalty goal by league scoring leader Howie Kirk to nip Claremont 2-1 for their fourth win in a row. It was Kirk's 12th goal in league play.

Keith Thompson gave Reynolds a 1-0 lead with a goal early in the second half but Claremont came back with a goal by Andy Masters at the 20-minute mark.

In other league games Friday, Mount View defeated Esquimalt 3-1 and Vic High and Belmont battled to a 1-1 tie.

Vic High led 1-0 at the end of the first half after a penalty goal by Mike Mulholland but Belmont played strongly in the second half and Ted Cuckovich scored the equalizer less than 10 minutes from the end.

Hillier Sets Mark

By The Associated Press

He thinks he's found another one in Texas.

And the best thing about the left arm in Texas is that it's only 18-years-old.

John Hiller, attached to the arm Martin waved in so often when he managed Detroit earlier this season, recorded his 38th save to set a major league record in Detroit Tigers' 5-1 victory over Boston Red Sox Friday night.

And David Clyde, owner of the teen-age arm Martin's pencil introduced into Friday night's starting lineup, came within one out of his first major league complete game despite the Rangers' 6-1 loss to California Angels.

In other games in the American League, Minnesota Twins knocked off Oakland A's 8-3; Baltimore Orioles beat Milwaukee Brewers 7-4 and Chicago White Sox nipped Kansas City Royals 6-5 in 12 innings.

Last season Clyde was pitching for a Houston high school and Martin was guiding the Tigers to a divisional title.

And after leaving a Detroit club that thought "youth" was a lispy pronunciation of the word "use," Martin has to be laughing about managing a sensational pitching prospect, 27 years his junior.

"The kid pitched a terrific game," Martin said. "He was throwing harder in the final three innings than he was in the first few innings. That shows you what kind of talent he has.

"We wanted to build his confidence and we felt that the best way to do that was to make him throw fastballs," Martin added. "Of course, they laid back for his fastball but when he gets the curve going he'll be outstanding."

The loss dropped his record to 4-7.

At Detroit, Hiller blanked the Red Sox the rest of the way to make Clay Carroll's save record of 37, set in 1972 for the Cincinnati Reds, a thing of the past.

"The record is worthwhile for a lot of people besides myself," Hiller, a recovered heart attack victim, said. "The credit should go to the doctors in Minnesota who operated on me, the doctors who encouraged me to come back and my wife for putting up with me during the year and a half I was out."

Cents Capture Fifth Straight

Victoria Cougars open their pre-season exhibition schedule tonight in Nanaimo and meet the Clippers of the B.C. Junior Hockey League again at 7 Sunday night at Memorial Arena.

Many of the other Western Canada Hockey League clubs have already been quite active in pre-season exhibitions, like Calgary Centennials who won their fifth straight game Friday night, edging Kamloops Chiefs 7-6 in Kamloops.

Dan Mandryk led the Calgary attack with two goals and the other scorers were Gerry Holland, Danny Gare, Don Ashby, Mike Rogers and Marc Seberyn.

Chris McMasters and Randy Andreachuk both scored twice for Kamloops while Greg Millyard and Tim Peck got the other goals.

In other WCHL exhibitions, Brandon Wheat Kings scored their third straight win, defeating Flin Flon Bombers 3-1 in Brandon; Regina Pats nipped Saskatoon Blades 7-6 in Saskatoon; and Edmonton Oil Kings downed New Westminster Bruins 9-3 in Edmonton.

Clark Gillies' second goal at 19:10 of the final period gave the Pats their narrow win.

Dennis Sobchuk also scored twice for the Pats and the other goal-getters were Mike Wanchuk, Greg Jolly and Kim McDougal.

Danny Arndt got two goals for the Blades and the other scorers were Ralph Klassen, Brad Owens, Darryl Roach and Murray Hanson.

Terry Bucyk, nephew of veteran National Hockey League star Johnny Bucyk, scored four goals to lead the Oil Kings to victory.

Ron Greschner scorel twice and Clayton Pachal once for the Bruins, who were outshot 49-30.

Pharr Rejoins Bomber Squad

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winnipeg Blue Bombers Friday released import running-back Rufus Ferguson to make room for back-up quarterback Tommy Pharr.

Pharr, who also plays wingback and defence back, came off the 30-day injury list and will be in the lineup when the Bombers meet Saskatchewan Roughriders in Regina Tuesday night.

'Must' Game for Lions

CALGARY (CP) — B.C. Lions need a victory Sunday to keep their Western Football Conference playoff hopes alive while Calgary Stampeders will be bent on topping off Wayne Harris Day in style.

The Stampeders will be out to win for "The Thumper" who became everybody's all-star middle linebacker during his 12 years with Calgary. Special half-time ceremonies are planned for the Calgary great whose career was ended last season by a neck injury.

A victory would give Calgary a 5-4 record and a four-point lead over the fourth-place Lions.

Toe problems plague both clubs. B.C. running back Johnny Musso is on the limp with a toe sprain and Stampeder defensive end Craig Koinzan is nursing a similar ailment.

Musso, considered the key to the Lion ground game, has spent the last week trying to break in a special plastic cast support that protects the sore toe. He injured it in a losing cause against Montreal Alouettes Sept. 11.

Although B.C. may lose Musso this game, they still have a strong threat in running backs Monroe Eley and Lou Harris.

Pro-Amateur Cards In Boxing Urged

EDMONTON (CP) — The Canadian Professional Boxing Federation has decided to approve professional-amateur boxing cards as a means of promoting activity and fan interest in boxing.

President Dr. Jean La Roche of Montreal said after the final day of the federation's annual meeting he was instructed to approach the Canadian Amateur Boxing Association with the idea.

Such cards, which are held in parts of the United States, would be conducted so that amateurs would not lose their Olympic status.

The Amateur Boxing Association currently forbids its boxers from fighting in the same building as professionals on the grounds the amateur program should not be used as a training ground to produce professionals.

Dr. La Roche, elected to his third term as president, said the federation feels that amateur fights before the main professional event would increase revenue, competition and fan support.

John Dowling, Victoria's only other "A" class player, was to meet Roger Ovens of Vancouver in his first match today.

Hockey's Rookies Prove Helpful

By The Canadian Press

Rookies and goaltenders shared the spotlight as the National Hockey League's exhibition schedule got into full swing Friday.

Dave Forbes, who played most of last season with Oklahoma City of the Central Hockey League, scored twice to lead Boston Bruins to a 5-3 victory over Montreal Canadiens at Moncton, N.B. Two other rookies, Dave Hynes and Chris Oddleifson, also scored for Boston with Greg Sheppard adding the fifth goal.

Guy Lafleur, Chuck Lefley and Yvan Cournoyer scored for Canadiens.

In other games, Pittsburgh Penguins edged New York Islanders 3-2, Atlanta Flames beat Toronto Maple Leafs 2-0, Vancouver Canucks downed Los Angeles Kings 5-4, and Detroit Red Wings nipped St. Louis Blues 3-2.

At Ottawa, the superb goaltending of Dan Bouchard helped Atlanta shut out Toronto. Bouchard and team-mate Phil Myre, who shared the goaltending, kicked out a total of 33 shots.

Rookie Tom Lysiak and John Lemieux scored before 7,643 fans.

Goalie Gary Smith, acquired in an off-season trade with Chicago Black Hawks, played brilliantly for Vancouver giving up one goal to the Kings before being relieved by Ed Dyck halfway through the game.

Orland Kurtenbach, Bob Schmautz, Don Lever, Bryan McSheffrey and Gerry O'Flaherty scored for the Canucks. Bob Berry led Los Angeles with a pair and Don Kozak and Randy Rota had singles. The game was played in Calgary before 3,035 fans.

World Hockey Association teams also moved into action Friday with Vancouver Blazers clipping Los Angeles Sharks 4-3, New England Whalers defeating Toronto Toros 3-1 and Winnipeg Jets downing Chicago Cougars 6-2.

Norm Beaudin scored two goals and Bobby Hull added another as the Jets whipped Cougars in Milwaukee. John Migneault's unassisted goal with 22 seconds gone in overtime helped Blazers drop the Sharks at Sacramento, Calif.

The 20-year-old forward, who played with Victoria Cougars last season, was taken to Lankaneau Hospital, where the team physician said X-rays showed no evidence of a fracture.

Cook is expected to be in uniform for the Flyers' pre-season opener tonight with New York Rangers at the Spectrum.

GREG MILLER
... "Look to young"

More Power for Island Tennis

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

Neglected and forsaken, like a lamb a mother sheep has lost interest in, Vancouver Island has finally struggled to its own feet and is preparing to venture out into the wide tennis world beyond.

For many years now, unofficial officials on Vancouver Island have had virtually no communication with — and even less co-operation from — the B.C. Lawn Tennis Association.

And so they have decided to go it alone and have formed the Vancouver Island Lawn Tennis Association. Now the men and women who have tried to organize the sport here will be "official." And now they will try harder.

That's the promise, at least, from Greg Miller of the Victoria Racquet Club.

Miller, Racquet Club singles champion and the man recently nominated to take over from John Fairweather as chairman of the club's tennis committee, has agreed to run for the position of first president of the new association.

Tony Simnett of the Oak Bay Tennis Club has allowed his name to go forward as vice-president and both he and Miller will be nominated, and almost certainly elected, at the VILTA's first meeting in Nanaimo on Oct. 14.

"Al Webster of New Westminster was at the recent meeting held to form the Island association," Miller said. "But he is the first BCLTA representative I have seen here in an official capacity in five years."

"Vancouver Island is regarded as being in the hinterland as far as Vancouver is concerned," Miller said. "We felt we would gain far more as an association running our own affairs."

Miller said that as well as the thousands of people on the Lower Island involved in North America's biggest-booming sport, there were plenty of lively clubs up north in places like Campbell River, Port Alberni, Comox and Courtenay that no one hears about and that no one does anything for.

The VILTA plans to divide the Island into North and South divisions with each having separate closed championships, leading to an Island final. Also planned are northern and southern division leagues, possibly leading to all-Island club playoffs.

Another area the VILTA plans to emphasize, said Miller, is junior development.

"We must look to young people if we are going to develop good tennis players on the Island," he said. "We can't rely on the oldsters to keep the game going."

Junior tournaments and plenty of clinics on the Island are a "must," Miller said.

"Another thing we could do is stage a big international tournament here with say a brewery or some big firm sponsoring it to the tune of about $10,000," he said. "Then we would attract players like Tom Okker, Mark Cox and Ken Rosewall and this would be great for tennis on the Island."

Singles to Decide Ryder Cup Battle

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — The captains of the United States and British Ryder Cup teams were agreed on one thing today—it's going to be close.

The rival squads were equal with eight points each going into the last day of the biennial golf competition. The foursomes and the fourballs were over. Now it all hung on 16 singles matches.

"And I think it's going to be really close," said Jack Burke, non-playing captain of the American team which is shooting for a 16th victory in 20 Ryder Cup matches.

Bernard Hunt, the British captain, said: "I'm disappointed of course that we lost our early lead, but we'll come out very strong on the last day."

The Americans, who were trailing with 2½ points to the Britain-Northern Ireland team's 5½ after Thursday's opening play, made a terrific recovery in Friday's foursomes and fourballs.

Honors were split evenly in Friday morning foursomes, where the players take alternate shots at the same ball. Jack Nicklaus and Tom Weiskopf of the U.S. beat Brian Barnes and Peter Butler by one hole.

Britain's top pair, Tony Jacklin and Peter Oosterhuis, scored a two-hole victory over Arnold Palmer and Dave Hill. Brian Muggett and Maurice Bembridge chalked up Britain's best win with a 5 and 4 rout of Lou Graham and Chi Chi Rodriguez. Lee Trevino and Billy Casper came back for the United States in the last morning match to beat Christy O'Connor and Neil Coles 2 and 1.

The afternoon fourballs were a triumph for the Americans, who won three out of the four.

Palmer and J. C. Snead beat Barnes and Butler 2 up, Gay Brewer and Casper hammered Jacklin and Oosterhuis 3 and 2, Nicklaus and Weiskopf beat Clive Clark and Eddie Polland by the same margin, and Trevino and Homero Blancas halved against Bembridge and Huggett.

Victoria Golfer Trailing by Six

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Defending-champion Kathy Whitworth birdied five holes Friday to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the Portland women's golf tournament.

Miss Whitworth, 33, who won the last two events on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, shot a two-under-par 71 on the 5977-yard Portland Golf Club course, soggy from this week's rain.

Tied for second place after the first round of the 54-hole tourney were Beth Stone, 33, a 13-year veteran, and 25-year-old Debbie Austin. Both shot one-under-par 72s.

Jane Blalock was in a six-way tie for fourth place at 74.

Dale Shaw of Victoria, who finished six strokes behind the leader with a 77, was tied with Americans Mary Budke and Mary Wolfe for low-amateur honors. The three, who were in a nine-way tie with six pros, finished well ahead of Robin Walton, another American amateur who had an 81.

Miss Blalock and several other women pros, including Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., wore tee-shirts celebrating Billie Jean King's victory over Bobby Riggs Thursday night in the tennis battle of the sexes.

Miss Bourassa, who had said earlier she was in a bad slump, dropped out of the tournament Friday after a round of 84, complaining of fatigue.

Miss Whitworth is the second leading money winner on the tour this year with earnings of $59,760 and all-time money leader in the LPGA. The purse here is $30,000 with the winner pocketing $4,500.

Record Round Boosts Green

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Hubert Green shot a course record six-under-par 65 Friday to share the second-round lead with Bob E. Smith and Dwight Nevil in the $100,000 Endicott open golf tournament. All had 36-hole totals of 134.

Smith, the first-round leader with a 65, turned in a 69 while Nevil, in his third year on the Professional Golf Association tour, carded a 66.

Bert Greene matching his 68 of Thursday, was in at 136—two strokes back—on the par 71 6730-yard En-Joie Golf Club.

Greene, one of nine golfers with 68s, after the first round, stayed in contention one stroke ahead of Jim Ferriell, who also opened with a 68 and followed with a 69.

Among the casualties of the cut were former U.S. Open champ Jack Fleck, 152, and veteran Art Wall, 150. The cutoff was 145 with 80 players set for the third round. Ben Kern of Toronto fired a 68 for 141 to qualify for the final two rounds.

Canucks Lose Barry Wilcox

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League have learned that leftwinger Barry Wilcox has been sidelined for four to six weeks after fracturing the ulna bone in his right arm in a workout at the team's training camp in Medicine Hat.

Wilcox, 25, a native of New Westminster, played 31 games for the Canucks last season, scoring three goals and adding two assists. He also scored 19 goals and 22 assists in 47 Western Hockey League games with Seattle Totems.

Umpires Seeking Salary Increase

CHICAGO (AP) — Major-league baseball umpires are seeking a contract calling for a basic $3,750-a year salary increase, a share of the world series receipts and a lucrative pension system.

John Cifelli, counsel for the Major League Umpires Associaion, has disclosed that he has presented the new demands to the presidents of the National and American leagues.

The current four-year umpire contract expires this year, and Cifelli said his group was seeking a two-year contract which would boost the minimum salary for the 48 umpires from $12,500 to $16,250 and also provide three winners' shares and two losers' shares from World Series receipts to a pool for sharing by all the umpires, 24 in each league.

The most startling demand concerned an umpire pension which now affords a maximum of $10,000 in lump payment after 20 years and $400 a year up to 10 years' service and $500 per year after 10 years' service.

Cifelli is proposing a pension of 20 per cent of salary after the third year ranging up to 100 per cent after 25 years with a retirement age of 60 instead of the current 55.

The salary scale currently ranges from $12,500 to $27,000 for a 15-year man with the average now $23,000.

GREEN MOUNTAIN ADDING NEW LIFT

NANAIMO — Construction of a second T-Bar, worth nearly $50,000, is expected to greatly improve skiing facilities this winter on Green Mountain.

Directors of the Sno Birds Lifts Society announced Friday work will go ahead on the second phase of the Green Mountain development plan and another T-Bar has been ordered from Harusch Lifts in Squamish.

The new lift will start from the first bend in the trail past the Sno Birds Lodge at the top of the existing T-Bar. It will rise through a vertical distance of 327 feet and will be approximately 1,542 feet long.

Completion of construction is expected by Dec. 15 and the new facility will open up vast new areas of the mountain, previously accessible only by hiking.

Bidding Is Brisk For 'Royal' Colts

VANCOUVER (CP) — Conn Smythe, former head of Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League, topped the bidders at the 21st annual British Columbia Thoroughbred Breeders' Society spring yearling sale Thursday, paying $12,500 for a colt by George Royal out of Tartlet.

It was the fourth time Smythe has purchased a yearling sired by George Royal.

Sid Belzberg of Vancouver paid $12,000 for another colt by the B.C. sire out of the mare Petite Mile. Belzberg also paid $10,500 for a colt by Bosun out of Barbara.

Four other George Royal-sired yearlings were sold during the evening for a total of about $50,000.

Andy Sim of Calgary plucked a pair of highly-prized yearlings from the sale, paying $12,000 for a New Policy-Yenoh Reb filly from the Double D. Farm, and $4,000 for a Hidden Treasure-Annsie Pie colt.

The sale started on a brisk note with the first 50 sales averaging better than $3,700 a head but fell sharply after that.

Society president Dr. Ross Stewart said final figures for the sale won't be available for several days. He said "we received reasonable prices for our top stock but we all feel they were worth more."

Bid to End Canadian Blackouts

OTTAWA (CP) — New Democratic Party MP Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) is urging the government to consider steps to end television blackouts of sports events.

In a Commons motion Friday, he asks the government to empower the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to lift the broadcasting ban on Canadian Football League games, National Hockey League and World Hockey Association home games when 70 per cent or more of the seats for a game are sold.

At present football home games in the CFL are blacked out, although NHL and WHA games usually are broadcast.

Last week in the United States Congress passed legislation to allow televising of home games that are sold out 72 hours in advance.

Labor-Management Inquiry Sought

A five-man royal commission to examine labor-management problems in B.C. was urged in the Legislature Friday.

Garde Gardom (L — Vancouver Point Grey) said a commission should be established if the labor legislation promised this session by the government does not prove effective.

He said the members of the commission should include representatives of labor, management, government, consumers and fixed income groups and recommended B.C. Supreme Court Justice Nathan Nemetz as its chairman.

Cardom said the commission should study costs, prices, productivity, markets, standard of living, wages profits and public interest.

"All of the established formula are wearing thin," he said of labor-management negotiations in the province. "B.C. needs cures and it needs direction. because what we've had up to now hasn't worked."

Cardom also said there is no reason why the public should have to suffer from strikes involving essential services, particularly in cases where work stoppages are illegal.

"It's one thing when two wasps try to sting each other," he said. "But it's another when they land on the backside of an innocent bystander and at that point it's not unnatural to suggest he's got a firm right to become aroused and defend himself."

Gardom said it is not unreasonable or unfair to suggest that the law should be followed and penalties enforced to discourage illegal work stoppages. "Ignoring of the laws is no answer, and laws passed to be ignored should never have been passed in the first place and should be repealed as quickly as possible," he said.

The Liberal MLA suggested that management and labor groups contribute to public damage funds which would be used to compensate public losses. If no illgal stoppages occurred, the money could go back to the contributors in the form of pensions or dividend benefits.

Impostion of a public levy or tax should also be considered for those responsible for an unlawful strike or lockout, he said.

And perhaps more emphasis could be placed on the "selection of final offer" concept, which involves the choice by an independnt arbiter between the last offers presented by both sides in a dispute, binding on both sides without alteration.

This concept, Gardom said, provides incentive to adopt a realistic position since the other side's offer could be the one chosen. It encourages both sides to agree rather than have the choice go to the other side and it provides a framework for collective bargaining without the necessity of strikes and lockouts.

Profit sharing should also be looked at as a means of increasing employee responsibility and effort, he said.

ADOPTED INDIANS TO KEEP STATUS

Indian children will no longer lose their native status and rights if adopted by white parents.

Legislation tabled in the House Friday by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi amends the Adoption Act to insure the "status, rights, privileges, disabilities and limitations" of an Indian child are not to be affected by adoption.

The amendment was brought in, according to a human resources department spokesman, because of a recent case in Victoria where the Supreme Court ruled the child did lose his special status granted under the federal Indian Act.

Non-Status Indian Homes Get Federal Repair Grant

A $405,000 federal grant to th B.C. Association of Non-Status Indians will pay for materials to repair 270 Indian homes throughout the province.

Jim Lanigan, vice-president, said today the association hopes to start its emergency home repair and renovation program by Oct. 1.

We are fully organized to go into action," he said. "Housing committees have been established throughout the province."

The grant is part of a $2.3 million fund made available Friday by the urban affairs department to Metis and non-status Indians. It is to help them make urgent repairs to their homes.

The association's next step is to apply to the Local Initiative Program for money for labor to carry out the repairs to the houses, Lanigan said.

He said the grant follows negotiations held in Ottawa recently between association officials and the department.

"We intended to renovate 300 homes, but the government had placed a ceiling on the amount of money to be made available for this program," he said. "So we reduced the number of homes to 270."

He said last year's home repair program was not too successful mainly due to the smaller grant and the lack of organization.

"We were only able to do a few repairs here and there," he said. Under this year's program, he said the association will administer the home repair project.

"Homes will be upgraded and repairs done so that they will last," he said.

Lanigan could not say how many homes of non-status Indians would be repaired on Vancouver Island.

"But some will be built here," he said. "At least three association locals on the island are affected by the program."

McCarthy Quits Socred Research

VANCOUVER (CP) — Former Social Credit minister-without-portfolio Grace McCarthy said Friday she has quit as research assistant to the opposition leader.

McCARTHY
... drops $11,000

Mrs. McCarthy gave no reason for resigning from the $10,788-a-year post except to note that she accepted it last year only on a temporary basis.

She said she has been asked to seek the Socred party leadership but will not make a definite statement on her decision until the end of October. However, she said she plans a speaking tour of the province "to speak out for competitive enterprise."

Mrs. McCarthy, who was defeated in the last provincial election by the NDP candidate in Vancouver-Little Mountain, said her post "has been rewarding and challenging and has given her "a real insight into the NDP's master plan to establish state socialism in B.C."

Grazing Explained

The director of grazing in the lands and forests department Friday defended himself against calls for his resignation for allowing severe overgrazing of rangeland leased by the provincial government in the interior.

Wilf Pendray admitted there are some "trouble spots" but said the charges, mostly by environmentalists, have been exaggerated. This summer, several newspaper articles detailed damage to alpine rangeland in the Chilcotin, particularly on the huge Gang Ranch.

He said most of the problems in regulating grazing stem from physical difficulties — rugged topography prevents fencing or close supervision of domestic cattle on the range — rather than from deliberate over-grazing by ranchers.

"Some alpine ranges are particularly delicate, others are more resistant. There are many areas where we don't allow cattle at all."

Generally, he said, conflicts between domestic stock and wildlife can be avoided, although economics controls the situation to a certain extent. A rancher often can't afford the high cost of fencing or frequent surveys of the ranges, he leases from the government.

He said the conflict between wildlife, particularly deer, and cattle, for rangeland "very definitely has been overstated."

MLA Forfeits Fee

Liberal MLA David Brousson (North Vancouver — Capilano) has informed the legislature he will not accept his salary for the fall session since he intends to be away several weeks travelling.

Brousson told Speaker Gordon Dowding he will be absent "to fulfill some long-standing business commitments" in London, Amsterdam and West Germany and to take a short holdiay to Russia.

He said Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound) will act for him in matters concerning his constituency.

DELTA DIKE DECISION REACHED

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal and B.C. governments have agreed to a $10.5 million flood control project for the lower Fraser River, the environment department reports.

Under the proposal, each of the senior governments will contribute about $4.7 million while the municipality of Delta will add about $1.1 million.

The project involves improvements in dikes which protect Delta, where most of the land is six feet below sea level. About 29,000 persons, three major highways and a railway will be affected by the project.

Environment Minister Jack Davis said the cost-sharing project is the fourth under the Fraser River Control Agreement of 1968.

Mine Workers Object To Safety Goggle Rule

BRITANNIA MINES (CP) — Work at Anaconda Britannia Mines is being disrupted by a protest against wearing safety goggles.

An official of the United Steelworkers of America said workers are being sent home after refusing to wear the safety goggles eight hours a day.

John Lovering, the mines general manager, said the regulation has been in force for 18 months and all workers, not just those working underground, are affected.

He said he did not know why the issue was cropping up now. He said company and union officials are trying to reach a satisfactory solution. The protest began on the Thursday midnight shift and continued on the Friday shifts.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A public inquiry into Surrey land deals and good government resumes Monday at Surrey municipal hall.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the International Woodworkers of America expressed doubt Friday that the union will move its headquarters to Vancouver as proposed by members in Western Canada.

Roland Roley, commenting on the union's international convention taking place here next week, said he could not see that such a move would bring any benefits.

However, a resolution calling for the headquarters to be moved from Portland, Ore. is expected to be a major subject of debate among the 500 convention delegates.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Parks Board members would become junior aldermen under an experiment expected to take place after the Oct. 24 plebiscite on civic government, city officials reported Friday.

An experiment probably will be conducted to make Parks Board members function as the parks or environment committee of council, Mayor Art Phillips and Parks Board Chairman Art Cowie said after a conference at city hall.

KIMBERLEY (CP) — A union spokesman said Friday an agreement between negotiators to provide a first contract for 125 white-collar employees of Cominco Ltd. here has been rejected by the company.

Les Lilley, President of the Office and Technical Employees Union, Local 1672, said the company withdrew from a memorandum of agreement under which the parties a week ago were to recommend acceptance to company principals and union members.

He said the membership voted this week 92 per cent to accept the agreement and to strike if necessary.

'CanCel Must Win'

Ed Smith (SC-Peace River) predicted Friday the government-owned Canadian Cellulose pulp mill will win an appeal against the tax it is assesed by the city of Prince Rupert.

He said the company will win because it will likely eventually take its case to the assessment appeal board which is government-appointed and so it would be a case of "the government appeal to the government" for a reduction in the assessment.

Smith explained that when the company first moved to Prince Rupert it agreed to a higher assessment in order to support the extra public services required.

Smith said it could mean a loss of $800,000 in tax revenue for Prince Rupert.

He said this attempt by the government to get special treatment from municipalities for its crown agencies or government-owned companies is just one method the government will use to make those agencies or companies profitable.

SIDNEY PLANS REC VOTE

Sidney Council has hired a Victoria architect firm to draw up a set of sketch plans for a proposed $670,000 municipal recreation centre.

A referendum for a recreation centre will be submitted to the electorate at the Nov. 17 civic elections.

Raindrops Abate Fires

Cooler weather and rain showers have brought a "long-sought improvement to the forest fire situation throughout B.C.," the forest service reported Friday.

Some 131 fires were still burning Friday, but none was considered serious. Total to date this year is 2,818 compared with 1,824 last year.

The forest service said higher-than-usual costs were incurred in fighting the Salmon Arm fire, which destroyed a number of homes and farms last week, bringing the total spent this summer to $8.6 million. Last year at the same time only $2 million had been spent.

Condominium Law Expected

Provincial housing minister Lorne Nicolson said Friday he expects legislation to be introduced this session by the attorney-general plugging a loophole allowing conversion of apartments to condominiums by making them co-operatives. "This is a matter for the attorney-general's department and he has that in hand," Nicolson said.

Bible Belter Feels Inflation

RALEIGH, N.C. — Evangelist Billy Graham said the high cost of preaching will force him to limit the size of future crusades.

Opening a week-long central Carolina crusade Sunday, Graham said he will move from stadiums and arenas to indoor auditoriums where costs are lower. "Outdoor crusades are too costly," he said. "Inflation is reaching us, too."

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Miss America, Rebecca Ann King of Colorado, said Friday she would stick to her stand on legalizing marijuana and a woman's right to an abortion.

"I feel all individuals should be able to make moral decisions," she said. "The government can't be big brother, from marijuana to seat belts. Abortion is not necessarily my moral choice, nor is marijuana."

WASHINGTON — Billie Jean King got a special salute Friday in the U.S. Senate for her tennis victory over Bobby Riggs in a match billed as a battle of the sexes. Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott said with her tennis victory, Mrs. King "ratified the 26th amendment."

The 26th, now before the states for ratification, is the equal rights amendment to ban discrimination because of sex.

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Carl Albert advised reporters Friday to ignore rumors he had met an "untimely death."

"I never felt better," Albert, 65, said.

He said he thought rumors were touched off by a nationally syndicated columnist on television discussing laws governing presidential succession when the office becomes vacant. In the course of his remarks he used the phrase "with the untimely death of Carl Albert" as part of a hypothetical example.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Ruling a woman's breasts are a public phenomenon, district court judge Harold Theus dismissed an indecent exposure charge against a go-go dancer here.

"Here we go," said Oklahoma county district attorney Curtis Harris. "We just can't file on topless dancers now, if they decided that's not indecent exposure."

District court judge Donald Marrs had dismissed the charge against Ann Owens, 29, Sep. 5 and Harris had appealed to district court.

In upholding Marrs' ruling, Theus said breasts are not private parts, and thus do not fall under any felony statute.

MONTREAL — Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty, who fled the Hungarian Communist regime in 1956, says he will publish his memoirs early next year despite the objection of Hungarian authorities.

The 82-year-old prelate arrived here for a 10-day tour of Canadian cities.

ZAPATA — Billionaire Howard Hughes has been invited to spend his "latter years" in Zapata, in southern Texas. "Here, on Falson Lake in Zapata County, you will have the best in climate, in seclusion, in self-entertainment, to enable you to live and live and live — and to invest your time and resources in development and research and human benefactions," city and county officials said in a letter mailed to Hughes.

Medication Monitors To Scan Meat Samples

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — In about a week, the federal agriculture department plans to start monitoring samples of domestic beef and pork for residues of antibiotics used in treating animals that might be passed along to humans.

The new program, to be carried out in Ottawa using samples of beef and pork liver selected at random at federally-inspected meat packing houses across the country, follows growing concern that antibiotic residues in meats might cause effects in humans.

The two main fears are that residues of antibiotics such as penicillin could produce reactions in humans allergic to the antibiotics; and that antibiotic residues in meats could lead to the development of human bacterial disorders in which the bacteria have become resistant to the antibiotics.

Many of the antibiotics used in animals are also used in treating humans.

There has been some scientific controversy about the use of antibiotics to prevent diseases in animals or even to promote growth. In such cases, the antibiotics are usually added to the animal feed.

The agriculture department claims the antibiotic monitoring program is merely an extension of their present programs to monitor meats for pesticide, heavy metal and growth hormone residues.

Initially, the meat inspection division will analyze samples of beef and pork liver for antibiotic residues. By early next year, it is expected to cover all meat animal species in Canada.

Some of the samples to be analyzed will be selected at random. Other samples will be collected where federal inspectors know or suspect antibiotics had recently been used to treat animals.

The department hopes to eventually analyze some of the samples in Calgary, to save costs and problems in shipping beef samples to Ottawa.

At present, the federal health department is sampling some domestic meats for antibiotics, but only at the retail level.

In recent months, the health department has clamped down on the uses of some antibiotics for animals, in part as a result of concerns about use of the antibiotics in human treatment.

Sextuplet Survivors Progress 'Steady'

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — Doctors report steady improvement in the respiratory difficulties that have plagued three of the five surviving Stanek sextuplets since their birth Sunday.

One of the infants, John, is listed in good condition and breathing on his own. Three others — Steven, Nathan and Catherine — are receiving some oxygen through a respirator, but doctors say they are requiring less each day. Their condition is satisfactory.

The fifth baby, Jeffrey, declined from good to satisfactory condition Friday because of a feeding problem. Doctors said the change resulted from his inability to retain mother's milk. Doctors said he has no respiratory problems.

Officials of Colorado General Hospital, where the children are being kept in a special nursery, say they probably will not go home for about six weeks. They were born six weeks prematurely.

Their mother, Edna Stanek, 34, is still resting in her private maternity room and expects to go home in about a week.

Sleep Drugs Induce 'Night-Time Terrors'

OTTAWA (CP) — The most common sleeping pills doctors prescribe may do more harm than good because they interfere with normal sleep patterns and can eventually lead to "night-time terrors," Dr. Roger Broughton told a medical meeting Friday.

The University of Ottawa medical professor and expert on sleep research said barbiturates, the most commonly-prescribed sleeping pills, really "should be the last resort."

Barbiturates and sleeping pills handed out routinely every night in hospitals "produce an abnormal sleep," he said. They put the patient into the "deep sleep" in which all muscles relax completely and there is almost no body movement.

After about 90 to 100 minutes of this deep sleep, the individually normally goes back to a lighter sleep in which he dreams, moves about in bed and has rapid movements of the eyes, Dr. Broughton said.

This rapid eye movement is normal—but it does not occur in people who have been given sleeping pills.

It is harmful when the person stops taking sleeping pills and the body tries to make up for the deep sleep that now is missed, he said.

The individual may have such severe nightmares and restless sleep that another sleeping pill may be needed.

"Anyone who has been on sleeping pills should be warned about these withdrawal nightmares," Dr. Broughton said. "They may have a bad time at nights for a week or so."

Some people when they go off sleeping pills may become depressed and suicidal, he said. Alcohol before sleeping and tranquillizers give the same withdrawal problems.

Dr. Broughton told a news conference later that most over-the-counter sleeping aids bought without prescription have "absolutely no effect at all."

However, studies have shown that a warm milk drink at night—just like your grandmother used to prescribe—does help.

"We don't know why for sure. Maybe it's the warmth on the mucous lining."

What should a person who has trouble sleeping do?

Cut down on stimulants, such as tea or coffee in the evenings, but cut down slowly; keep regular hours; avoid alcohol; get a little exercise in the late day but not just before bed.

And try to find out the amount of sleep you need, he said. Some people need 10 hours, others four.

If sleeplessness persists, the person should see his doctor, Dr. Broughton said, because lack of the deep sleep state can be harmful, especially for children.

Research has shown that the hormone that causes growth is excreted in the body during sleep, especially the deep sleep periods, he said. And it now is certain that the excretion of sex hormones, such as the ones that govern a woman's menstrual cycle, occur during sleep, he said.

LIFESTYLE ALTERS PERSONAL HEALTH

OTTAWA (CP) — Improvements in the health of Canadians now "depend far more on how we behave as individuals, on our lifestyle, than on improvements in the quality and quantity of health care."

Dr. Maurice Le Clair, deputy national health minister said Friday Canada has gone about as far as it can afford in providing more and better treatment for diseases.

He told an Ontario regional meeting of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons if more Canadians are to live longer and healtheir lives, then more emphasis has to be placed on prevention.

"It is apparent we have been spending vast sums treating diseases that could have been prevented in the first place."

Dr. Le Clair was providing details on the federal health department's new role, announced two weeks ago by Health Minister Marc Lalonde.

The department now will place more emphasis on public education, so that individuals can more intelligently assume responsibility for their own health, and more support to research programs, environmental controls and physical fitness programs.

"When we identify the causes of sickness and death in Canada, we find that they are rooted in . . . human biology, environment and lifestyle," Dr. Le Clair said.

"Many of them are diseases of choice, diseases of affluence or deseases of neglect for which prevention measures exist or could be applied without much difficulty."

Violent Thoughts, Sex, Murder Become Epidemic

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The physician who investigated the Sharon Tate murders said Friday ritual murders are on the increase and apparently due to "an epidemic of violent thought."

Dr. Thomas T. Noguchi, Los Angeles medical examiner, said many of the slayings are linke dwith sex and many of the victims are lone female hitchhikers.

In California, he said, ritualistic cults practising human sacrifice have been on the increase for the past year and a half. He said the slayings usually occur on weekends and many of the victims have crosses etched on their foreheads.

"The injuries are often very cruel," Dr. Noguchi said.

Among the worst offenders is a devil worshipping group that practices a black mass.

"We are boiling in a sort of pressure cooker," he said. "People are fantasizing acts of violence. Motion pictures are hounding us. People are becoming more susceptible to suggestions of violence."

Wind Group Performs

At Camosun College on Tuesday, the first of a monthly series of concerts featuring the Victoria Wind Ensemble will be presented.

Members of the ensemble are Gerald Van der Linden, oboe, Lawrence de la Haye, clarinet, and Peter Mclean, bassoon.

Tuesday's concert is sponsored by the Musicians' Union Trust Funds and consists of music by Richard Walthew, Gordon Phillips, Jan Koetsier, Jacque Ibert and Darius Milhaud.

There is no admission charge for these concerts which are to be held in Room 310 of the Young Building (the clock tower building) on the Lansdowne campus.

ROCK STAR Jim Crose, whose most recent hit was Big Bad Leroy Brown, was killed in a plane crash Thursday night in Louisiana after performing at Northwestern State University.

Gati Back From Europe

Looking fit and relaxed, buoyant Victoria Symphony maestro Laszlo Gati breezed back into town this week from a six-week European junket.

On the trip through Rumania, Yugoslavia, Hungary, Austria and Germany, Gati was accompanied by his wife and two daughters.

"It was a holiday trip," he says. But not purely.

"I talked with concert organizations and agencies in Budapest, Bucharest and Munich and lined up some potential soloists."

Among some he mentions are a young Hungarian pianist who has just performed with the Berlin Philharmonic, a colorful Yugoslavian concert group, and an extraordinary artist named Zamfir. This Rumanian gypsy leads his own gypsy orchestra and performs brilliantly on the Pan flute pipes, beloved of antiquity.

Gati's next flight will be to conduct six concerts in Mexico in November-December.

This will be followed by two with the CBC Winnipeg orchestra in January and three concerts in Fresno in February.

At the end of the Victoria season he will go to New Zealand as guest conductor for public and radio concerts in Aukland, Wellington and Christchurch and possibly in Australia.

Then back for the 1974 Victoria summer festival.

GARRARD

Opera Star At UVic

A broad operatic repertoire of nearly 50 major roles, including Wagner's great Wottan, is commanded by Canadian bass Don Garrard.

The singer, who was born in Vancouver and has created a glowing European reputation, will appear in recital Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the University of Victoria MacLaurin Auditorium.

Last weekend in Vancouver Garrard made what critic Max Wyman described as "a triumphal return" to the city of his birth.

He appeared as part of a CBC Festival of Music in the Queen Elizabeth Playhouse, singing a program that included Handel,' Schubert, Liszt and other works.

"It was, for the time allotted a very catholic choice and handled with enormous effectiveness and economy of achievement," says Wyman.

Garrard will shortly return to London for roles in Rheingold and Siegfried for Sadler's Wells and at Drury Lane Theatre.

Tickets for his recital in Victoria can be obtained by calling the department of music at UVic.

Music Festival

Syllabus for the 1974 Greater Victoria Music Festival is off the press and can be obtained from the festival office, Nelson's Music Centre, 1320 Broad Street, Hall and Fairfield Muisc Centre, Fort Street, or the Bernie Porter Music Studio, 725 Caledonia.

Deadline for entries in the festival, which runs from April 5-22, is Jan. 19, and due to the earlier than usual date, no late entries may be accepted.

'Music of Europe' Sunday

Twentieth century music will be the overall theme for this season's Sunday afternoon hour-long concerts in University of Victoria's MacLaurin Auditorium.

Music of Europe is the program's subtitle.

A sonata for oboe and piano by Poulenc will be performed by Eileen Gibson and Robin Wood, and Martin Linde's trio for recorder, flute and harpsichord will feature Lanny Pollett, Glen Fast and Frances Carter.

Electronic music by Carlheinz Stockhausen and the debut of UVic's "Scratch" orchestra conducted by George Corwin will take place.

U.K. Sends Aid

DACCA (AP) — Britain will provide 18,000 tons of wheat to Bangladesh under terms of an agreement signed here.

The 18,000 tons is in addition to Britain's commitment through the European Common Market to make available 175,000 tons of wheat this year to meet food shortages in Bangladesh.

The Graham Greene Touch

By BEATRICE CARROLL

Come again to Graham Greene country — this time a shabby provincial town in Argentina, separated by a great muddy river from a cruel dictatorship in Paraguay and situated some indeterminate distance from the capital of Buenos Aires.

The tiny foreign colony of the city — all disappointed men — includes Dr. Eduardo Plarr, a physician half-English, half-Spanish, whose exiled father, a lover of Dickens and Conan Doyle, vanished years before into a Paraguayan prison; old Humphries, a teacher of English who has bestowed upon himself the title of Doctor without ever having seen the inside of a university; and the consul, Charley Fortnum — only an "honorary", not the real thing — aging and alcoholic and recently married to a girl from Senora Sanchez' brothel who is 40 years his junior. Greene characters all.

THE HONORARY CONSUL, by Graham Greene. Collins. $6.95.

By mistake — bungling and error, often with a wry comic twist, is Greene's own stamp — the honorary consul is kidnapped instead of the intended important victim, the American ambassador, by a curious group of desperadoes; as Dr. Plarr describes them: "a failed poet, an excommunicated priest, a pious woman, a man who weeps."

A melodramatic plot though a common enough occurrence today in Latin American countries, it seems, with its revolutionary priests, powerful dictators and frequent coups and revolts. But the singular talents of Graham Greene make scenes and characters more true than any newspaper names. In a vividly authentic setting, he has created men who are fearful, harassed, proud (much is made of the revered Spanish term "machismo", the sense of masculine pride), often betrayed by women and sometimes reaching high heights of courage.

As a psychological novelist concerned with social evil and the weight of sin, Greene stands alone, and his Catholicism adds to literary emphasis. It is said of Cardinal Newman that he believed a sinless literature of sinful man to be impossible, and in this Greene concurs. He has always stated that Catholicism is difficult, that the ascent to faith is a slippery slope, and nowhere has he shown this more masterfully than in the discussions in the barrio — the hut holding the kidnapped, the kidnappers and Dr. Plarr, who has been called to attend the consul.

Here Father Leon Rivas (his title is honorary, too, for the priest is married, excommunicated and deep in political terrorism) finds in the last hours that his belief is stronger than he is and that although he believes that "God must be responsible for all the evil as well as all the saints; he has to be a God made in our image with a night-side as well as a day-side" . . . he also believes that "the time will come when the night-side will wither away, like your communist state, and we shall see only the simple daylight of the good God."

The Honorary Consul is one of Graham Greene's best books, even better than The Power and the Glory, and a good deal better than The Comedians, both of which had South American settings. He is always an impressive, serious novelist as well as a masterful story-teller, appealing to the intellect and the emotions. The reader will be stimulated by the discussions of the eternal values, troubled by the lonely vulnerability of the doctor, who feels so little and envies those who do, and cheered by the surprising casual courage of the pathetic honorary consul.

Self-Portrait Of a Vital Man

By AUDREY JOHNSON

There is a degree in the art of communicating through letters and reminiscences that amounts to genius.

This is when the writer succeeds in leaping the mechanical barrier of putting words on paper and presents himself to the reader directly, naturally, in all but actuality a living, breathing presence.

My Young Years is a vivid, frank, simply stated self-portrait of the pianist's first 30 years of life.

It is a long book — 470-odd pages — but despite the fact there are no great events or thrills, no profound or provocative musical discussions in the recounting of the often frustrating, impecunious years, it sustains interest from cover to cover.

MY YOUNG YEARS, by Arthur Rubinstein. Random House. $11.50.

One could live and work side by side with a person for a decade and not get to know him as thoroughly as one does Rubinstein.

And not only the man, but his environment, the social customs of his time and place, family life and character — all stand out with the clarity of personal encounter.

Now 86, and an artist who has been a fabled figure on world concert stages for more than 50 years, Rubinstein comes through to us as a completely natural man while revealing the many-layered patina of the total cosmopolitan.

His music is a part of the naturalness. It began by the time he was two years old, when he could sing and recognize tunes before he could speak. He quickly learned the names of the notes on his sister's piano keyboard and his love affair with the instrument began right there.

He would not be diverted to the violin (which his father considered superior) because "my instinctive need was for polyphony, harmony . . ."

A perfect ear, prodigious memory and good hands made everything come almost too easily to the young Rubinstein. As frank in the discussion of his faults as of his virtues, he admits to a liking for the sybaritic life, a disinclination for hard long hours of practice and of frequently employing the easy way by falling back on some proven warhorse of a concerto rather than working up something new.

But remember, this was all in his young years. This book does not reveal to us what the mature years and marriage might have done to alter his habits and outlook.

It takes us no further than the World War I period when his career finally began to consolidate.

Those who expect the memoirs to be full of first-hand discussions of important musical events, of intellectual discussion and musical philosophizing, may be disappointed. Nevertheless its substance is music. It is always there, accompanying you through the pages, closely woven through the narrative.

Rubinstein, in those years, was a very great lover. Friends, gourmet food and drink, travel, luxurious surroundings, music, theatre — but above all and from an early age, women, were the objects of his devoted pursuit.

His sexual appetite was intense, uninhibited, and is as naturally discussed as any other aspect of his life.

He was not yet 14 when he first fell in love with a young woman several years older and the rest of his first 30 years are thickly strewn with both passionate and casual love affairs.

But his sensual nature is balanced by sensitivity, innate kindness, tact.

His deep concern when he finally faced the necessity of disentangling himself from the paternalism of a prosaic teacher — his anguish when forced to reject his mother's intention of coming to Berlin to live with him on benefactors' funds — these and other like incidents reflect his courtesy and gentleness of spirit.

The stream of reminiscence flows pleasantly on, rippled by anecdote, occasionally agitated by some traumatic experience such as his near involvement in a duel (over love, of course) and the low point in his career that brought on a pathetically silly attempt at suicide.

He has written his story as he might speak it to an interviewer, without literary pretension, in an unaffected outpouring that despite its length and lack of pacing or crescendo is full of high-spirited charm and delightful detail.

SIX SURVIVE 38 DAYS ON RAFT

Endurance Without Heroism

By ANNE McDOUGALL

This is a real, live adventure story—alive by the skin of their teeth, the six people involved would probably add.

It is roughly and honestly told by the Scotsman who organized the trip, Dougal Robertson. The book is based on notes from the log he kept throughout the ordeal. The date was June, 1972.

SURVIVE THE SAVAGE SEA, by Dougal Robertson. Griffin House. $6.95.

The Robertson family travelled over 750 miles and had 290 to go when they were rescued on the 38th day by Japanese fishermen.

Robertson is a former navy man who spent 25 years dairy farming in North Staffordshire before depressing conditions convinced him to sell out and show his family something of the rest of the world.

In his long hours at sea, after he lost the schooner, he had plenty of time to worry about his decision. He knew that an attack by whales is so rare as to be almost incalculable; he was further comforted by the realization that a newer ship would probably have gone down even faster, giving them less time to get the raft and dinghy over the sides.

Without sextant, chart or compass, Robertson's calculations came impressively close. His estimated latitude was only five miles out; his longitude (because of cross currents and trade drifts) was 100 miles out, and would have brought them to land five days sooner than anticipated. They didn't know that had they reached land, anemia and cramps would have prevented them from walking.

Robertson avoids all hint of heroism. He is scrupulous, in fact, in reporting morale problems, flaring tempers, bitter quarrels.

Although he acknowledges his own bitterness in years past, he does not seem to have entirely overcome it. His very honesty, in his case, somehow prevents a book of obvious courage from being an inspiring one.

TALES FOR THE HAMMOCK

By TORCHY ANDERSON

I know no better hammock companion on a warm afternoon than one of the several collections of Greg Clark's pleasant, earthy little "pieces" about the birds, fish and people he has collected in his long years as a newspaper columnist. This is his eighth volume of this kind.

THE BIRD OF PROMISE, by Gregory Clark. McClelland and Stewart. $6.95.

Being one of the craft, I once lured Greg to my Vancouver flat for an evening of what might have been expected to be shop talk. Nothing of the kind. Before the evening was one drink old I had Greg talking fish and the tackle for taking fish. The living room was cluttered with photographs, fly rods, flies and a wife who knew enough about patient and understanding fishermen to understand they talked a lot more trout than they landed.

CLARK . . . no sermons

This latest of the Clark collection takes its name from the thrush we call a robin, the "red bird" that made Europeans feel at home, even thought it was out-size compared to the "red birds" they had left.

According to Greg it was one of these cheerful red birds, arriving one morning after a beast of a winter, that persuaded the Clarks to stay in Ontario instead of hot-footing back to Ireland.

Greg Clark's little anecdotes are earthy and distinctly Canadian. It may be that they are a persuasive argument for Canadians to treat their outdoors with love and respect. But do not assume they are sermons on ecology. If you get sleepy in that hammock it will be the weather, not Greg Clark.

A Dazzling Writer Taking Shortcuts

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

Whether West Indian immigrants living in Toronto are habitually brutalized by the police, exploited by rich Jewish employers and lusted over for their primordial blackness by white men and women alike, I could not say. Since this book is a novel and doesn't claim to be documentary, it is perhaps fair enough for its author to deal with heightened and isolated experiences. But it's pretty hard, only a few miles from the U.S. border, to read about a black minority group in our country, and preserve a literary detachment. Rightly or wrongly, it matters whether the actual events in Storm of Fortune could really have happened.

STORM OF FORTUNE, by Austin Clarke. McClelland and Stewart. $8.95.

Some things in the book lack conviction. Austin Clarke (not the Irish poet, but the Barbadan cultural attache to Washington) never makes any of his characters wholly believeable. He writes brilliant descriptive passages and his grasp of colloquial dialogue is amazing, but he is an external observer; watching and eavesdropping, never fully understanding his creations.

Henry White, a leading character, loses money repeatedly in crap games, marries a Canadian zoologist, and has begun writing poetry before he is mysteriously murdered at the end of the book. He seems like three men arbitrarily given one name by the author. The dumb, backroom gambler, the married superspade and the deliquescent versifier simply don't fit into one personality. A better novelist could perhaps have succeeded in this. Or a more conscientious one.

Throughout the novel there is a feeling that Clarke, full of confidence in his powers, is rushing to finish the book: skating over the surface, missing out connection, undermining some of the truly moving sequences in the book.

CLARKE . . . jazzy dialogue

The story of Estelle Leach, for instance. Pregnant by her sister's white employer, she unsuccessfully seeks an abortion and then in shame tries to hide from her own community. In a weirdly convincing sequence, she is invited to stay in Timmins by a "Mrs. Macmillan" whom she meets in hospital. It turns out that this lady is not called Macmillan and does not even live in Timmins. Yet her willingness to drag the poor girl half way across the province for a lie is shown to be not malice, but a contorted desire to put on a pleasant act for the friendless black mother-to-be. It's convincing and saddening.

And so is the rest of Estelle's story: her train journey where West Indian waiters gamble on their chances of laying her and white passengers make passes. Her brave attempts to go it alone in the city, the only Canadian place she knows at all, and the revolting boarding room that is all she can get. And when she does at last return to the tolerant community of West Indians, she finds with total disillusionment that even her best friend's husband can't help regarding her as a sex-object.

If only the rest of the book combined the pathos, humor and understanding of this sequence. But it doesn't. The "mixed marriage" between Henry and Agatha Barbara Sellman (their married name becomes Sellman-White) should surely have been crucial to the book, but it's strangely lifeless. An absurd rhapsodic ode to Henry's "blackness" is all the insight we ever get into the white girl's feelings. (Which is analogous to reducing Lady Chatterly's Lover to the tale of a noblewoman having it away with her husband's gamekeeper, and excluding Lawrence's explorations of how or why it could happen).

It's a lazy book, then, with far too many shortcuts and too heavy a reliance on Clarke's gift for jazzy dialogue. Even this has strange moments: on one occasion a white Toronto cop lapses inexplicably into Trinidad dialect.

And some really good devices in the novel are insufficiently worked out: the use of "Sparrow's" records for instance. "Mighty Sparrow" or Francisco Slinger, is a Trinidad calypso singer, one of the true folk-geniuses of our time. Clarke hit on the idea of having his records played at ironic moments during the book but contents himself with constantly repeating the same refrain of one song. It's appropriate enough, but Sparrow's range is immense and with a little more care his songs could have piled irony upon irony as a West Indian chorus to the follies of Toronto life.

But I am dealing with details now. It is enough to say, I think, that Storm of Fortune is energetic and at times dazzlingly written. But it reads like a first draft.

From Cosmo To Chatelaine

By PAT BARCLAY

Early fall may be a great time to harvest the potato patch, but it's mighty slim pickings weather for book reviewers. Too early for the annual flood of books aimed at the Christmas market, it's also too late to stir up much interest in limp leftovers from the previous spring.

With these glum thoughts in mind I looked up a resolutely cheerful bookseller of my acquaintance, to talk about magazines.

Even she was slightly down in the mouth after an unprofitable, browser-filled morning. Oh, that the Happy Hooker would be moved by the Muse once again.

But to return to the subject at hand: What, I wanted to know, are Canadians reading during this period of hard-cover slump? What, for instance, are our best-seller magazines?

My informant, as Pierre Berton used to say, held up four fingers. "Playboy, Cosmopolitan, Time and Newsweek," she recited, counting them off one by one.

The news was as bad as I'd feared. "Not even Chatelaine?" I whispered weakly.

She's a good type, and she let me down gently. "Well, of course, both Chatelaine and Maclean's sell mostly by subscription. There's not as much call for them on the stands." Then she couldn't resist spoiling it all by adding slyly, "Same goes for Readers' Digest."

So there you have it, folks — our best selling national magazines, based on an independent random survey, are Playboy, Cosmopolitan, Time and Newsweek. Is anyone surprised?

On the theory that if there's anything worse than reading Time, it's reading Time and Newsweek together, I dropped the latter from the list and substituted Maclean's and Chatelaine. What follows, then, is an assessment of five popular magazines based on a reading of their September issues (September 10th, in the case of Time).

With the exception of Miss Centrefold, whose suntan looks capable of starting a riot with her bikini on, Playboy seems to have fallen on lean times. I found its humor sharing more in common with Mad Magazine than with Rabelais, and its contributors (all but the unfortunate Christina Rossetti, who had no choice) distinguished only by their obscurity.

There is a vicious hatchet job on the film of Jesus Christ Superstar, and an outrageously boring 21-page panel discussion on "New Sexual Life Styles".

The whole mess was pretty well summed up for me by Paul Krassner, who wrote the tasteless satire "Thomas Eagleton Seagull" . . . (He) had already absorbed . . . the basic method of survival in his new environment. He had learned how to fake sanity."

And then there's Cosmopolitan, the female Playboy. This edition even ran an interview with Hugh Hefner's girlfriend. (Her name, wouldn't you know it, is Barbi. If they decide to marry, will he change his to Ken?) Cosmo is a cross between an advice column and a fan mag, with here and there a hint of Culture to promote the notion that its readership is adult. I was heartened to discover its movie critic liked Jesus Christ Superstar (so did I), then found she liked them all indiscriminately, even Dillinger.

But at least it was a relief to try the quiz which was supposed to test your "emotional age", and learn that by Cosmo standards I'm "overly mature".

As usual, Time lived down to expectations. The same old processed news, the same old world reports — "world" meaning Russia and China, plus South America, Phillipines, Mexico, etc., with a colored segment on Africa suggesting that continent is the next most likely candidate for membership in the empire. I enjoyed the slick cover story on Bobby Riggs, the aging exhibitionist who hustles lady tennis players, but more especially I appreciated the ad for Dual turntables, inserted into the Watergate coverage. "How golden," it said, "is silence?"

After Cosmo, Chatelaine seemed terribly normal. For a long time now, the word "normal" has been in disrepute. "What is normal?" we say scornfully, thereby tossing out the baby with the bathwater, for although the importance of individual variation should be self-evident, so should the crying need for standards of taste, judgment, behavior, etc., which society can respect. The time for another "return to normalcy" is past due.

Like Chatelaine, Maclean's breathes an air of objectivity, sanity and restraint. The emphasis is on playing fair, on presenting vivid personal opinion sometimes countered by opposing opinion in the same issue.

The September Maclean's is distinguished by a splendid article by June Callwood, who casts her clear gaze on the Royal Visit. There is also an unexpected column by Heather Robertson who, wonder of wonders, has discovered a TV program she likes. It's an insular magazine, if you like, very consciously Canadian in its ambitions, but it's necessary, and it's Good.

Foiled Arab Missile Launching Sparks Major Hunt in Italy

By DAVID WILLEY
London Observer

Italian counter-intelligence agents who foiled an Arab terrorist plot to shoot down an Israeli airliner with a mobile rocket launcher are now trying to ferret out the complete commando cell which planned the attack.

They are searching for two Arabs who they believe planned the attack down to the last detail and supplied the sophisticated Russian SA-7 electronically-operated mini-missiles to the five-man Arab commando arrested last week after a tip-off from Israeli intelligence agents working here.

A Lebanese trader arrested in the flat at Ostia where the rocket-launchers were in a wardrobe told police he thought there were carpets and an underwater gun in the packages. The other four members of the commando picked up in a small hotel in the centre of Rome are still being interrogated at a prison in Viterbo outside Rome for greater security.

The most important clue police have to go on is the description of a black Mercedes car with West German number plates which transported the missiles and launchers from the hotel where the Arabs stayed to the flat which one of them had rented at the seaside resort of Ostia on the direct flight path outtside Rome's international airport.

The missile-launchers were packed into the boot of the car which had been left outside the hotel with the doors open and the key in the ignition. They were transported to the flat in Ostia ready for use last week, the day after the arrests. Police believe that it would not have been difficult to select a secluded vantage point around the airport perimeter from where the commando group would have had a good view of planes taking off and landing. A beach called "Dead Man's Shell," surrounded by swampy ground has been suggested as the most likely site for the planned launching of the missiles.

Italian defence experts are being extra secretive about the Russian mini-missile launchers. No photographs have been published of the weapons but they are understood to be about four feet long and would not have been able to be taken to pieces to escape detection.

The electronic guidance system, which would have enabled the missiles to home almost infallibly onto an Israeli airliner within a range of two to three miles, needs periodic maintenance but the actual operation of the weapon is a simple matter that can be learned with a minimum of training.

The question which baffles police is how the weapons were introduced into Italy. It is unlikely that, given their bulk, they could have been brought in as baggage through the airport. Police believe the five Arabs picked up the missile-launchers here and that the weapons could have been smuggled in as diplomatic baggage by an Arab mission in Rome.

One theory police are working on is that there is an arsenal of arms held somewhere near Rome for use by a Palestinian organisation operating in different countries in Europe. The Russian-made weapons cannot be obtained on the international arms black market and it is now crucial to the success of the investigations to establish how they were introduced into Italy.

Police are convinced that there is a secret base in Rome which organises Arab terrorist attacks. A number of mysterious deaths of Arab and Israeli citizens here suggests that a serious underground war is being waged on Italian soil.

The Arabs arrested this month face charges of illegally keeping and importing arms which could bring possible sentences of from two to six years imprisonment. But there is a history of leniency by the Italian authorities towards Arab terrorists: for example, the two Arabs who handed over a booby-trapped record-player to two English girls as baggage on an El Al flight to Tel Aviv last year were quietly released and have presumably skipped the country now.

One newspaper commented that this leniency had been attacked by other countries "which find the release of Arab terrorists absurd and suspicious". It added: "The terrorists are convinced that in Italy, where they can act with impunity, anything is possible."

What is certain is that Italy has become the happy stamping ground of a legion of foreign agents working for the Israelis, the Arabs and the Americans and that the Italians are becoming increasingly embarrassed by the choice of their country as a secret operations centre in the Middle East war.

LONG ARM of the law gets a helping hand from a mirror on a telescopic pole as an English policeman checks for bombs on the underside of cars going through a checkpoint in Winchester. Similar checkpoints have been set up in numerous spots as part of the security measure against bombings.

Immigrant Registry Firm

OTTAWA (CP) — The government intends to enforce its Oct. 15 deadline for registration of persons who entered this country illegally, Immigration Minister Robert Andras said Friday.

Speaking in the Commons in reply to Conservative immigration critic Lincoln Alexander (Hamilton West), Mr. Andras said the program is "proceeding with dispatch."

A total of 32,251 persons had registered with the immigration department since a 60-day campaign on illegal immigrants began in mid-August.

Andras said 9,121 have been given landed-immigrant status so far. Special teams were spreading across the country to speed interviews with prospective registrants.

WAITER RULES ROOST AT ROMANIAN TABLES

By NICK LUDINGTON

BUCHAREST (AP) — On the road from this Romanian capital to the industrial city of Piteste, 75 miles north, a hungry driver stopped one morning at the Matasaru Restaurant.

A waiter told him breakfast was not being served. The driver asked why. "Because we don't want to," the waiter said.

The traveller nevertheless asked for a menu.

"It's locked in the safe," said the waiter.

So the driver ordered a dish all Romanian restaurants seem to have at all times, grilled mititei, spicy, elongated meatballs.

When served he complained that there was less than the quarter pound he ordered. The cook admitted the mititei were too small but said this was compensated for "because they taste better than usual."

Restaurants in Romania are inspected under a system of public and state control teams. But a current campaign in the official press, reporting dozens of dining-out disasters, indicate the inspections aren't enough.

PAPER COMPLAINS

Scinteia, the Communist party organ, complained recently that food is often served "according to the bizarre rules of the restaurant and not the wishes of the customer."

Poor service and monotonous meals are the chief complaints.

In a survey of nine moderately-priced restaurants the government newspaper Romania Libra found it took an hour or more to have a simple two-course meal.

The survey was borne out at the popular downtown garden restaurant, Trocadero. The waiter appeared after 15 minutes. No menu. Grilled sausage and French fries came in 13 minutes. After 15 minutes of eating it took 45 minutes to get coffee and pay the bill. Total: 88 minutes for one course and coffee.

At a nearby table a Romanian train conductor solved the problem his own way. He took a table with his wife and son and ordered a beer. They shared it in three glasses while munching a picnic of bread, salami and grapes from an airline bag.

The reporter found that at the Salt Road restaurant outside Bucharest, waiters fought for jobs as servers of beer rather than food. They made as much as 100 lei, or $7, extra, equalling their salaries, because of bigger turnover, therefore more tips, overcharging and a racket of refilling beer bottles with dregs left by departed customers and reselling them.

At the White Horse, a new restaurant near Bucharest, a customer asked for fish. No fish, said the waiter. Later, in the kitchen the customer saw a bank of fish. He asked for one. "Those are for the staff," said the waiter.

Then there was the restaurant that hung out a sign reading: "Specialty of the Day. First course, soup. Second course, food. Third course, dessert."

Indian Extremists Zero In on Gandhi

By RAM SUNDAR
CP Correspondent

BOMBAY (CP) — Extremist political groups in India have launched a campaign against the philosophy of Mahatma Gandhi.

The campaign has assumed several forms including bitter attacks describing the father of Indian independence as a "reactionary" and "procapitalist," appeals to students and workers not to cooperate with Gandhian pacifist organizations and attempts to desecrate and wreck statues of the leader.

A magnificent statue of Mahatma Gandhi erected by the citizens of Trivandrum, capital of Kerala province, was found damaged on Aug. 15, Independence Day.

On the same day another statue of Gandhi in the town of Salem in adjoining Tamil Nadu province was found garlanded with shoes. Filth had also been thrown at the statue.

Simultaneously, slogans denouncing the anti-colonial leader who led his country to independence from British rule through non-violent methods were found chalked on the walls of some schools in the two provinces.

BURNED PHOTOS

In the town of Moga in Punjab province in north India photographs of the Mahatma were burned by some unknown persons.

Anti-Gandhi vandalism has also been reported from West Bengal and Madhya Pradesh provinces.

No one has been arrested so far but it is suspected that the vandalism is the work of extremist left-wing groups known as Naxalites.

The Naxalites got their name from Naxalbari, a forest area in West Bengal where five years ago some 300 militant members of the Indian Communist Party launched a movement to overthrow the government through violent means.

Mostly consisting of young people, the Naxalites have declared war on all the existing Indian values including parliamentary democracy. According to one of their leaflets, "the philosophy of Mahatma Gandhi which many misguided Indians still follow will only weaken the will of the nation."

PACIFISTS FAST

A group of pacifists have been fasting near the Gandhi statue in Salem to protest the vandalism.

Kumaraswami Kamaraj, a former president of the Indian National Congress, Gandhi's main political instrument in his anti-colonial struggle, has expressed shock at the denigration campaign. He thinks that "anti-national" elements are behind it.

The Communist Party of India has also made it clear that it opposes any campaign directed against Mahatma Gandhi.

Why have the Naxalite Communists apparently chosen Gandhi as a target knowing that it will only make them unpopular in the whole country?

"Perhaps the Naxalites imagine that this is the best way of focusing national attention on themselves," an official of the ruling National Congress party said.

Brinks Bid Under Study

The province has reserved decision on whether to allow Brinks armored cars to expand their operation in Vancouver beyond the city area.

The eastern-based company has expanded its operations in the last two years to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and last year set up temporary facilities in Vancouver. But when the company sought approval under the B.C. Motor Carrier Act for movement of its armored cars outside Vancouver, it was turned down.

Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall said Friday an appeal by Brinks against the decision has been referred to a cabinet committee for study. He gave no details of the appeal.

Dog, Cat Numbers Boom

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The dog and cat population in the United States is increasing at an alarming rate, reports Dr. Robert Schirmer, director of the small animal clinic at Michigan State University.

The problem is so severe that 60,000 dogs and cats must die or be killed each day to maintain a stable population.

The pet population increased about 40 per cent during the 1960s compared with only a 10-per-cent increase in the human population, he said.

"Pet owners allow their animals to breed without giving thought to the consequences," he said. "It may be wonderful to have the kids witness the miracle of birth, but what happens to the puppies or kittens when there aren't enough good homes for them?"

He noted that Dr. Lloyd Faulkner of Colorado State University has been experimenting with chemical sterilization of dogs and cats. The process shows great promise as an effective pet population control measure, Schirmer said.

FEZ: FALLEN CITY?

FEZ, Morocco (WP) — It's not just the perhaps inevitable appearance of a Holiday Inn that has changed Fez.

Returning after an overlong absence, a visitor who has known and loved the city for most of two decades has the impression that Fez has fallen from grace.

The great mosques, the narrow streets, the grand houses, the artisans, the merchants, the exotic smells of the bazaar all remain.

But what seems to have departed from the city, founded in 791, is its identification with the monarchy, or perhaps more accurately, with the present monarch, Hassen II.

Oldest of Morocco's five capitals, site of its humiliating signature of a French protectorate in 1912, hotbed of nationalists who recovered the country's independence in 1956, Fez was perhaps the last place which sincerely believed in the monarchy's spiritual and temporal hold on all Moroccans.

In the past two summers, first the army, then the air force tried to kill the king, who owned his escape mostly to "Baraka" as divine good is called in Arabic.

In the days before the attempted coups, the Fassis, as the inhabitants of Fez are called, ascribed most of the country's ills to the king's entourage. The king was a good man, but badly counselled.

Now, this delicate distinction has been destroyed. During the Ramadan season of fasting last year, Fassis were furious at what they judged to be the king's hypocrisy.

He appeared on televevision almost nightly leading prayers in mosques, often surrounded by diplomats from Moslem countries.

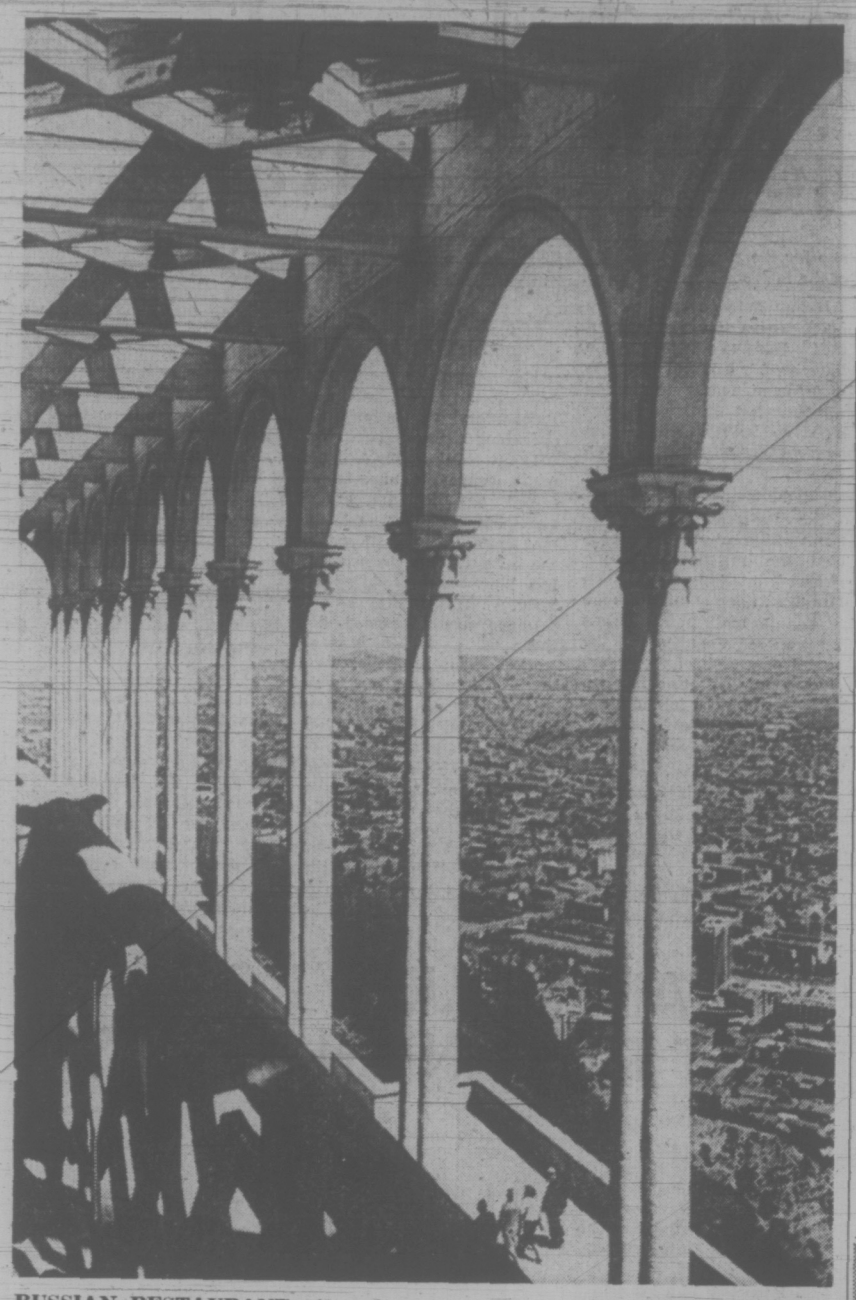
All that piety," hooted a middle-aged Fassi, "when we know all about the corruption. At least we could have had something entertaining on television at night after the day-long fasting."

Even more sacriligious, in view of the king's dual authority, are the incredible anti-Hassan jokes, almost all of which are too crude, indeed obscene, to bear printing.

"One way to express anxiety, we are told, is to joke about it," said a Fassi friend.

Troop Upkeep

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and West Germany have started a new round of negotiations aimed at a two-year agreement to offset the foreign exchange costs of maintaining American troops in West Germany. Under the previous accord, West Germany paid $2.034 billion which, U.S. estimates show, covered about 80 per cent of the U.S. deficit in the balance of payments with West Germany.



RUSSIAN RESTAURANT offers view of city of Tbilisi through graceful arches.

Gospel Makes Static Along the Airwaves

CAPE MAY, N.J. (UPI) — A gospel radio station being broadcast from a ship anchored just outside the U.S. territorial limits by the Rev. Carl McIntire interferred with two other AM stations, and McIntire has stopped until the problems can be resolved.

He apologized Thursday to a commercial radio station he was knocking off the air, WHLW of Lakewood, N.J., which broadcasts on a frequency of 11.70 Kilohertz. McIntire tried to send his program on 11.60 Kilohertz.

Baltic Offers Soviets Faint Taste of West

New York Times

JURMALA, U.S.S.R. — It is hardly Miami Beach, Biarritz or Corfu, but in the Soviet Union many people consider it "going west," and they do not mean just geographically.

The summer resorts here in Latvia and in the other Baltic republics facing out toward Scandinavia have a reputation and an ambience that more nearly approach those of the West than do other parts of the Soviet Union — without losing a distinctly Soviet character.

For 20 miles an immaculate, well-equipped, sandy beach curls around the Gulf of Riga past the grand old turn-of-the-century sanitarium at Kemeri and the rambling frame houses sheltered for decades in the pine forests near Dzintari and other communities in the area.

Older folk come for the sulphur treatments, medicinal mudbaths, solariums and special inhalations at the sanitariums and for the prescribed promenades along the miles of beach dressed in anything from dark, baggy suits fo slacks and undershirts. The young, "traveling wild," as they say in Russian, rent single beds for $2 a night and hunt out the open-air dance hall at Asari or the traveling Czechoslovak amusement park that offers modest Coney Island rides (no roller coasters).

Down at the sea there was surprisingly little boating or waterskiing. On the beach large signs carefully delineate "zones of passive rest" from "zones of active rest" to separate throngs of languid sunworshippers from those fixtures of the Soviet scene, the energetic devotees of physical fitness ever engaged in volleyball and soccer.

Amid the sprawling bodies ubiquitous transistor radios could be overheard picking up the BBC, Radio Stockholm or a Polish station playing something by Simon and Garfunkel. The Jugas Perle restaurant, jutting out over the sands at Bulduri, boasts a Saturday night show with Dixieland jazz and honest-to-goodness can-can routines by leggy girls in bikinis that puzzle as well as titillate the middle-aged establishment figures who most often seem to wangle the sought-after tables.

The city of Riga, just 10 miles from the beaches, projects a European flavor with spires of Lutheran and Catholic cathedrals and peaked Germanic roofs evoking its Hanseatic history — not to mention more contemporary high-stooled Italian-style coffee bars, American-style Good Humor sticks and eye-catching Latvian girls in form-fitting sweathers

HOW MANY GROSZYS DO YOU TIP THE WAITER IF THE CHECK COMES TO 87 ZLOTYS?
And while it may be funny to hear stories of how someone tipped some waiter $5 on an $8 meal, or bought a pair of shoes for $45 when he thought he was paying $16, you're not going to find it funny if it happens to you.
The only way to avoid it is to "learn" something about the currency of the countries you're going to visit.
At Featherstone's we advise our clients on currency matters before they travel.

Gina Lollobrigida Stars In Front and Behind Camera

By BOB THOMAS

Her product is a book called Italia Mia, a pictorial love letter from Gina Lollobrigida to her native land.

"I took them all myself," said the actress of her pictures. "Not only that; I selected the 192 photos out of 20,000 that I took. I wrote the captions. And I even did the layout for the book."

Miss Lollobrigida, still stunning at 44, is so excited about her first book that she is hitting the road to stir interest and sales in the United States and in Europe. It is "something I have never done for one of my movies," she says.

How did she take up photography?

"It came naturally. I studied painting and singing at the Fine Arts Academy in Rome. I never had it in mind to be an actress. I went into acting quite by chance.

"Acting was not creative enough for me; you are too much under the control of the writer, the director. I couldn't do painting on a movie set because it required too much concentration. So I began taking photographs on the set, of my son.

"When I was making Solomon and Sheba with Yul Brynner, he told me, 'You must make money for your photographs; then you will know that your pictures are good.'"

Three years ago Miss Lollobrigida decided to do just that. She began touring Italy to record her impressions of the land and its people. There were problems.

"A woman taking photographs attracts more attention than a man," she said. "But if the woman is famous, that is a disaster. The people you are photographing no longer behave normally."

A big problem was the paparazzi, the zealous band of free-lance photographers who prey on celebrities in Rome. "They knew about the book, and I knew they would pop up wherever I went," she said. "They would have ruined everything."

So Gina wore a dowdy dress and frizzy wig and stuffed prune pits in her cheeks.

"It worked," she said. "But it was very difficult. You have to present your passport in Italian hotels, so I had to register as myself. I left the hotel as I normally look, then I had to put on the disguise in the automobile."

She went undisguised to the island of Inosa where a number of Sicilians are being detained pending possible prosecution. Her caption from there reads: "They call them Mafiosi—but regard them as 'important guests.'"

The "guests" invited her to lunch. So did the mayor and the police, and she suggested that they all have lunch together. They did.

Miss Lollobrigida says her hobby is expensive. She hopes her book will make enough money so she can break even on the project.

For two of the years while she took pictures Miss Lollobrigida neglected her acting career. Now she is reading scripts again, but not always with pleasure.

"So much of what I read is pornography," she said. "I don't need that. I am sexy dressed.

"I would never appear in one of those films. Supposing my 16-year-old boy went with his friends to a movie and saw his mother nude. The respect of my son is worth more than a thousand careers."

FEWER CANADIANS LINKED TO RELIGION

OTTAWA (CP) — Figures released Thursday by Statistics Canada indicate a slight decline since 1961 in the percentage of Canadians reporting some religious affiliation.

Among Protestant religions, the United Church showed the biggest decrease. The 20.1 per cent of Canadians belonging to that denomination in 1961 dropped to 17.5 per cent in 1971.

The Anglican Church lost percentage points in the same 10-year period. There also was a slight percentage decrease in the Baptist, Lutheran and Presbyterian churches.

Showing slight increases were the Roman Catholic Church, up by half a point and the "other" category which includes all denoninations observing the Greek Orthodox rites as well as persons who indicated no religious affiliations.

The report is based on 1961 and 1971 census figures.

Brutal Childhood Often Found In Green Berets' Background

VANCOUVER (CP) — A brutal childhood may make the difference between a soldier and a war resistor, an American psychotherapist has reported.

In a study of background differences between groups of United States war resisters and Green Beret volunteers for the Vietnam War, psychotherapist David Mantell found almost all the soldiers grew up under stern, often violent, parental discipline.

In a guest lecture at the University of British Columbia, Mantell said Green Berets reported their parents attacked each other also.

He said he found "doves" came largely from homes where discipline was almost never enforced physically and where parents fought with words rather than fists.

Mantell is a research associate at the Max Planck Institute in Munich.

"I found that most of the successful soldiers had been deeply frightened of their parents, but despite even severe beatings the youngsters thought their punishment had been fair and deserved, and that their parents had been too good to them," Mantell said.

"The family characteristically repressed emotion, believing that such feelings as warmth, consideration, affection, pain and disappointment should not be shown openly."

The war resisters reported that as children they were impressed by some form of social involvement by one or both parents — from political activity to volunteer work in the neighborhood.

During the elementary and high school periods, the Green Beret types generally enjoyed success and prestige in sports, their social lives, in schoolwork and in such activities as boy scouting.

After high school, however, they tended to drift in spite of the many indications of successful careers and finally welcomed the idea of volunteering for service overseas.

CANFIELD

Former Enemies Meet After 29 Years

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — After 29 years, a Second World War flyer shot down near the Austrian-German border will meet the German medic who fought off angry farmers to save the American's life.

The medic, now a physician living in Canada, spent 25 years trying to track down the wounded American flyer whom he knew from a battered helmet only as "Sgt. J. Canfield."

The search ended last week when Dr. Frank Small of Calgary finally located Joe Canfield, 49, a former Redwood City service station owner who now is disabled.

"I thought he was selling insurance when he called last week," Canfield said.

"I didn't believe him, but he wrote a letter naming times and places, so I called him last night and there's no doubt it happened. It's just fantastic. I can't believe it."

Canfield was radio man and gunner aboard a B-24 Liberator bomber hit by anti-aircraft fire during a bombing raid over Munich in 1944.

The bomber made it to Austria, and Canfield, who was wounded, bailed out with the rest of the crew. Not until he received Small's letter this week did Canfield know of the dramatic events surrounding his parachute landing.

"I still recall you lying on the ground, helpless and expecting the worst," Small recalled.

STAY IN DARK CUTS SMOKING

VANCOUVER (CP) — If you want to stop smoking just lie in a dark, soundproof room for about 24 hours. If you don't stop smoking there's a good chance you may cut down by half, and even stop completely after more isolation.

These are some of the findings released from an experiment conducted by Dr. Peter Suedfeld, head of the department of psychology at the University of British Columbia.

Dr. Suedfeld has completed a 12-month follow-up of the isolation experiment conducted at Rutgers University, in April, 1972.

He had 72 volunteers who wished to stop smoking. Half of them went through the "sensory deprivation" isolation chamber and the others acted as a control group.

USED VOLUNTEERS

The volunteers were split again into four groups—those who experienced the chamber with anti-smoking messages repeated to them periodically; those who were in the chamber only, with no messages; those who stayed home and had the same messages relayed over the telephone and those who received no treatment but were urged to find other methods of stopping smoking.

The results scored in the average number of cigarettes smoked a day expressed as a percentage of the number previously smoked:

Chamber with message, 31 per cent at end of six months and 55 per cent at end of year; chamber only, 18 per cent and 48 per cent; home group rated 41 per cent and 85 per cent and those who had no treatment had a 101-per-cent increase in six months and 83 per cent over one year.

Dr. Duedfeld said the message seems to have little effect, possibly because its an intrusion in the isolation.

He said next time he'll give the messages first "then let the volunteer think about them during the 24 hours without sound or light."

Needle Helps Arthritis

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than two-thirds of 36 patients treated with acupuncture for rheumtoid arthritis experienced pain relief, reduced swelling of joints and less tenderness, a study presented this week to a National Institutes of Health workshop showed.

The study was conducted by Drs. Arnold Benson, medical director, and Ralph Coan, staff physician, at the Acupuncture Centre of Washington, which has been in operation since December of 1972.

The figures were presented at a meeting at which NIH participation in scientific studies of acupuncture, the ancient Chinese practice of healing with needles, was discussed.

Benson and Coan carried out follow-up interviews with 64 patients treated for rheumatoid arthritis during the first six weeks of their clinic's operation here. After three months, they were able to contact 56 patients, of whom 36 had been given five or more acupuncture treatments.

Of the 36, 25 patients, or 69 per cent, reported improvement, they said, including less need for pain killing drugs and in some cases, reduction of the nodules which occur on the arthritis sufferer's joints.

Soap Helps Sex Life

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Cleanliness may be next to Godliness, but it is also an asset to sexual relationships in marriage, says a psychiatrist.

Dr. M. O. Vincent, superintendent of Homewood Sanitarium in Guelph, Ont., says he frequently hears complaints from people about the cleanliness of their marriage partners.

"I hate to tell my husband he's a stinker," said one.

"He's so wonderful in every other way.

Vincent told a church women's dinner: "It's one of the more easily resolved problems in sexual relationships."

He noted that men aren't the only stinkers.

"This is one of the realities that bothers husbands and wives. It's difficult subject to discuss. How do you tell your wife you wish she'd take a bath? The more you love her the more difficult it is."

Vincent, discussing the struggle for intimacy in marriage, emphasized the importance of communication, companionship and sexual relationship.

He said compromise is an important part of the sexual relationship. There must be an assessment and concern for each other's needs—a desire to compromise.

He said companionship is a cornerstone of marriage and if a husband and wife do not do things together their interests diverge. Then, it is difficult to re-establish the original relationship.

Husbands and wives have different attitudes towards the sexual role, he said. A husband can have a fight with his wife in the evening and later in the privacy of their bedroom feel quite amorous. He dissociates his lovelife from the recent battle.

When rejected he asks: "What does she want to do, make a federal case out of it? We only had a little fight." —

The wife calls him a sexual fanatic. She was all upset by the fight.

"I can't understand the beast wanting to make love."

Vincent said husbands and wives should understand their psychological and physiological differences and talk to each other about their feelings.

Sexual adjustment takes time, he said, but most problems can be worked out where there is openess, love and understanding.

"Some couples have a misunderstanding what is proper in the sexual relationship. You run into couples where one of them likes to experiment and try out different things.

"The other says: 'There's only one way and I don't want any monkeying around.' "

"In marriage, I know of no reason—be it physical, mental or spiritual—that says any kind of sex activity between a man and his wife is wrong or harmful, if it's mutually acceptable.

"However, it's obviously wrong if a particular kind of behavior is distasteful to one and the other forces that kind of conduct on the other person.

"If each of us would treat our spouse as if we were afraid we might lose them then we'd never have to fear that we would lose them."

Doctor 'No Hero'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Physicians and others in the health care business are not the public heroes they once were to the average person, says Dr. A. Peter Ruderman, a University of Toronto professor.

During a lecture at the University of B.C. this week to students, Ruderman said the advent of medical care and hospital insurance plans had played a part in this drop in prestige.

"It's because hospitalization and medicare, the big areas of public need have been met," said Ruderman. "There's some concern now about a need for pharmacare and denticare but these are relatively small potatoes compared with hospitalization and medicare."

With the main health pressure off, the public has new needs and goals on which to concentrate.

"The goals of the man in the street are more than health. Unless he's sick he's going to be more worried about the cost of living than health care."

With worries about jobs, pollution and land use crowding them, people — most of them healthy most of the time — just aren't concerned with health and even tend to gamble that they'll stay healthy, he said.

"But when you work in the health field you tend to get a warped view because you see only a small fraction of the people," he said, referring to people who are in need of healfh services.

The lack of public concern with health is part of the answer to why governments balk at spending more on health facilities and services out of the public's money.

"You are going to have to suffer a secondary role and you'd better get used to it," said Ruderman, an acknowledged expert in health care delivery matters.

"People who deliver health care are not the heroes on the world scale that they used to be."

Ruderman said more people than ever seemed to be studying the cost of health care but he said much of the so-called research has really been a pretext to "beef up" health facilities.

"I think a lot of research money is being wasted now," he said, on what he called "demonstration rather than research."

He said demonstration was getting a big federal grant to set up a clinic or other medical facility and then watching it work as a study in health care delivery.

Ottawa Curbs Two Fungicides

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—The federal agriculture department has eliminated a number of home and garden uses of the fungicide folpet, including its use to control fungus diseases of lawn turf and potatoes. In a related move, the department has eiher suspended or modified a number of approved uses of the popular fungicide captan, which is used on a long list of vegetables tnd fruits to control various fungal diseases such as mildew, rot, blight and scab.

With both fungacides, agriculture department research had found the chemicals were just not effective as claimed and posed health threats.

The specific changes for folpet, a chemical used widely on roses and around the home garden, are expected to apply in 1975 and include:

—Suspension of use on potatoes.

—Suspension of claims for controlling turf diseases, rose rust, carnation rust, and corn rot of gladiolus.

—Application limited to up to the day before harvest for apples, blueberries, cherries, crabapples, cucurbits, grapes and strawberries.

Royal Wedding Plans Sidelights Under Fire

LONDON (AP) — Princess Anne, royal tomboy, approaches the altar at historic Westminster Abbey with some Britons wondeging whether she will assume the manners of a gentle, blushingg bride.

She prefers fast cars to slow coaches, rough riding to soft living, casual clothes to haute couture.

She's better known for some scathing sallies of sarcasm than for diplomatically-turned phrases. When she fell off a horse, the 23-year-old daughter of the Queen snapped at reporters and photographers: "You've had your money's worth — now leave me alone."

Anne, fourth in line to the throne, marries cavalry Capt. Mark Phillips Nov. 14. Although a commoner, Phillips comes from a well-to-do, socially-established family.

A quickening of public interest is illustrated by a flood of wedding presents, a spate of souvenir booklets, an emerging industry of engraved china tea mugs and reports of booming color television rentals.

But some strident notes have brought a discord to the wedding plans — mainly stirred by well-meaning admirers of the princess.

The house the young couple will call home, the cruise they'll call their honeymoon and one of their biggest wedding gifts have all come in for heavy criticism.

It's a far cry from the public goodwill that presaged the Nov. 20, 1947, wedding of Anne's mother, then Princess Elizabeth, to navy Lieut. Philip Mountbatten, now Prince Philip.

Britain then had just emerged from an exhausting war and the royal festivities were a glittering contrast to the rigors of austerity.

Now, in a richer, brighter Britain the biggest newspaper stories so far have centred on attacks against some marriage sidelights.

First, the marital home. Capt. Phillips, 25, will work as an instructor at Sandhurst Military Academy and the royal couple will live in a five-bedroom Georgian mansion nestling among the trees there. They will pay the defence ministry $19.20 a week for the house.

The small rent and the large home jarred many Britons worried by rocketing house prices.

"My daughter's husband works hard to save for a house with a bath, but every time they near their savings target up go house prices and mortgages," Mrs. Betty Emerton complained in a letter to the mass-circulation Daily Mirror.

"It is this sort of thing that alienates the public from the royals," penned Trevor Salisbury.

Phillips replied in a well-publicized letter to a critic who had offered to give the couple a guided tour of slum housing that as a soldier he lived where the army posted him.

But the Mirror reported an "overwhelming majority" of readers criticized the authorities for making the house available.

They also criticized the $2,400 a day to be spent on sending the royal yacht Britannia and 280-man crew for a 19-day honeymoon cruise of the Caribbean.

Another row blew up when a newspaper disclosed that the army was asking, military-style, for "volunteers" to contribute toward a wedding present.

Buckingham Palace circles let it be known that such wedding gifts traditionally go to charity.

But Willie Hamilton, a Scottish Laborite member of Parliament and noted anti-monarchist, labelled Anne as "this plain and pricey young women."

He reminded Britons laboring under a government pay freeze that Anne's allowance from the taxpayer rises by $48,000 a year to $84,000 the minute Mark slips the ring over her finger.

Conservative Ronald Bell rejoined: "If members of the Royal Family enjoyed the same freedom to speak as Hamilton, they would not seek to rival his standards of taste, but they might make some telling remarks about comparative value for money."

Behind the bickering, the storerooms of Buckingham Palace are beginning to bulge with wedding gifts, ranging, said a spokesman, "from poems expressing good wishes to quite bigger things."

They ran, he said, into "many thousands" of items. The cost of the wedding is estimated at some $240,000. The Times of London expects it to be "the most spectacular seen in Europe for many years."

The Queen will pick up bills that are expected to include $168 for a four-tier, horseshoe-shaped cake; $16,800 in hotel bills for invited foreign dignitaries; $24,000 in champagne and canapes for the expected 1,200 guests at the reception and some $7,200 to decorate the few hundred yards Anne's coach will clatter from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey.

Clothes are not a major expense. Unlike her mother, who married in a symphony of satin, pearls and diamonds, Anne has chosen a moderately priced ready-wear fashion designer to make her wedding dress. Mark will enter the Royal Family wearing the scarlet and blue full dress uniform of his regiment, the Queen's Dragoon Guards.

The wedding will be televised to a worldwide audience of millions.

SPECIAL ISSUES of the Illustrated London News and other U.K. magazines featuring Anne and her finance have already begun to appear on newsstands in the Greater Victoria area.

To Russia—On a Dining Room Table

By ELIZABETH TAYLOR

LONDON (FWF) — I took my family to Russia on our dining rom table — I mean, I sold our dining room table to pay the fares.

After all, what does a family whose culinary tastes run to baked beans and fish fingers want with a Regency dining table? With the proceeds we took the "lady bug" route to Leningrad—1973 must be population-explosion year for ladybugs because our ship, the MS Estonia of the Russian Baltic Line, was swarming with them. They bobbed about on the surface of the swimming pool, not drowning, just floating; they popped into your drinks, secreted themselves in your shoes and decorated your ice-cream sundaes with their colorful little bodies. The last thing I saw when I got off the ship again at Tilbury Docks here in England, was a little ladybug corpse on the gangplank — a souvenir of the voyage.

"Taking four children to Russia! You must be mad." I got used to people saying things like that when I told them where my children — aged 15, 13, 10 and four — were going for the summer holidays. It was not mad, however, because the children enjoyed Leningrad. But most of all they loved the Estonia.

What they liked about it was its firm attitude to entertainment. "The children's party will begin in exactly three minutes," boomed the loudspeaker one afternoon. And another time: "Come and play bingo in one minute — please come or everything will be spoiled."

Meals were very punctual and lying in bed was not allowed. Exactly at eight a.m. a loudspeaker in every cabin boomed out. "Good morning, breakfast is now being served." If you were later than five minutes to nine, no breakfast. Afternoon tea was from 4 p.m. till 4:30 — exactly. Wander in at 4:31 and you got no tea.

I tried very hard to turn the loudspeaker off in our cabin but it was useless.

We wondered if it was a two-way system and if the crew coud hear us as clearly as we heard them. If they did we must have been a great disappointment because all that could be heard in our cabin was children squabbing about who was to have the top bunk.

Around the Estonia time was never wasted. In the morning there were Russian classes and classes in Russian dancing; twice a day there were documentary films. These were usually eulogies of various parts of the USSR — films like My Ukraine and Our Caucasus — and they were very predictable — shots of grain harvests, shots of cement mixers, shots of blocks of new flats, shots of the local university, shots of nursery schools, village weddings and then a glorious fade-out of waving tree branches and sentimental music.

Every evening in the "lounge" a solemnm little quartet twanged away and the entertainments officer, a worried-looking chap in a blazer, sang popular songs of 15 years ago.

His moment of glory arrived the night before we reached Leningrad when he organized a staff concert and the passengers were enthralled to see their table waiter singing a Russian song about his guitar; a stewardess in blue satinf and sequin singing a Russian pop about "Our Birch Trees in Autumn;" stewardesses and waiters doing a folk dance; four sailors doing a Cossack dance; the barman playing a jazz trumpet; the entertainments officer playing the accordion and finally — to our great delight — our own cabin stewardess, transformed in a black velvet dress out-Julieing Julie Andrews with "I Could Have Danced All Night."

She must have learned the words by sound only because she could not speak a word of English to us. The standard of the performances at that concert, however, would have put many British television shows to shame.

When you take children on holiday you try to be sure they are served with food they can eat. After initial suspiciousness about raw herrings as first courses, they found the food very much to their taste — large, juicy steaks and only two sweets, both favorites fortunately, ice cream and tinned pineapple. I had hoped for caviar and sure enough one night it appeared, a minute serving nestling in a huge pancake. Hurrah, the children didn't like it, so I had theirs as well.

In Mary Moore's recipe for Cream of Tomato Soup this week it calls for 3-16 tsp. baking soda — not powder as appeared in the column.

FASHION SHOW

A special segment of the fashion show will be devoted to bridal wear and trousseau lingerie, from our newest collection.

For a change of pace there will be an interlude of sprightly fashions from Miss Frith Jr., which caters to those whose tastes run to color and dash.

Hair styles will be created by Audrey's Coiffures, fall floral arrangements by The Island Florist, background music by Reginald Stone at his magnificent Conn Organ. Also valuable door prizes.

The event — "Fabulous Fashions for Fall" is sponsored by Victoria Symphony Society Women's Committee, with two shows beginning at 2:30 p.m. and 8 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel, Wednesday, September 26th.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Cooking with a French accent . . .

French cooking is generally acknowledged to be the most refined in the world so it isn't surprising that French cooking utensils should follow suit . . . and of all the French cookware imported into this country . . . Le Creuset is undoubtedly the finest! . . . We learned this week that the Wooden Spoon is now carrying Le Creuset . . . which is cast iron, to which is bonded a diamond-hard glass enamel . . . and comes in every type of skillet, saucepan, roasting pan, casserole dish . . . from large to small (lovely individual onion soup casseroles among the latter) . . . This heavy cast iron cookware conducts heat evenly, gently . . . saves on electricity . . . cooks everything to perfection . . . It can be used either on top of the stove, or in the oven . . . Roasting pans and casseroles have removable knobs to lift the cover . . . so you don't burn your fingers . . . and saucepans and skillets come with both wood and cast iron handles . . . It's very attractive in its cheerful orange color . . . can go right from stove to table . . . Added to all their other qualities, Le Creuset utensils clean easily . . . can be put right in the dishwasher . . . and are so durable that with normal care they will last you a lifetime . . . and you might even want to hand them on to your grandchildren! . . . We think you'll find just about every type of Le Creuset utensil you could wish for at the Wooden Spoon . . . but should there be something they don't have, they'll get it for you in jig time! . . . The Wooden Spoon, Midtown Mall, 726 A View St., 384-8823.

Fall clothes for the "with-it" man . . .

Here we go again expounding on male sartorial elegance . . . and don't think we don't love it! . . . The Ram Shack has such smart masculine attire that we enjoy our visits there every bit as much as those to stores catering to our own sex! . . . As nice a casual outfit for fall as you could hope to find is the waist-length washable polyester and wool jacket by Jantzen . . . with co-ordinating slacks . . . This comes in a brown and blue plaid with tweedy pattern on it . . . as well as plain shades of brown, navy, burgundy and grey . . . Jacket and slacks are sold separately so it isn't essential to have both . . . There are some really sharp fall sports jackets . . . the popular two-button style . . . in either all-wool or wool polyester mixtures . . . A Hyde Park suit in 100% wool has a gold and brown check jacket almost like a Harris tweed . . . with plain brown pants . . . priced at just $125 . . . Another Hyde Park suit which caught our eye is harvest tweed with a hand-woven look . . . $145 . . . And we thought the Country Squire Surrey Lane flannels were quite super . . . Pure wool with two-button jackets, they come in a nice light brown and a greyish blue . . . can be as dressy or as casual as a man pleases . . . Only $139 . . . For solid comfort you can't beat 100% wool doubleknit slacks . . . which the Ram Shack have in good supply in plain shades of blue, grey, rust and brown . . . to co-ordinate with their sports jackets . . . Just $32.50 for these! . . . Ram Shack, University Heights Mall, 477-3314 and Hillside Mall, 386-0724.

Hardly anybody — unless they are very rich — thinks in terms of wild mink anymore!

O Finlandia! . . .

There's something about fashions from Finland which always "sends" us . . . and judging by the speed at which the Finnish handwoven long dresses, skirts and capes which arrived at Wilson's a couple of weeks ago are disappearing into customers' wardrobes . . . they're getting a lot of other people excited too! . . . So we warn you . . . if you'd like one of these for yourself, don't delay too long . . . The full-length dresses have fringed cape sleeves and yoke, and wide embroidered wool borders at the hem . . . A particularly elegant one is black with camel and white embroidery . . . A regular length cape matches this . . . and together they make a handsome pair . . . A number of long evening skirts have a plaid design woven in, and matching triangular fringed shawls . . . At the time of this writing, there was a red, a green, a black, a burgundy and a lovely soft grey and blue on hand . . . Other skirts, without matching shawls, have woven-in borders . . . Any of these Finnish skirts would look ravishing worn with a very simple top . . . Nice to wear at home for entertaining . . . great for a night out at dinner or theatre or what-have-you . . . Wilson's have a new shipment of Finnish handmade wood jewellery which seems to be the perfect accent for the Finnish hand-woven clothes . . . Earrings and bracelets . . . pendants and necklaces . . . all feather-light in weight, and very unique in design . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Famous Bally shoes now made in Canada . . .

Welcome news for women who love shoes by Bally of Switzerland . . . These elegant, beautifully-made shoes are now being manufactured in Canada . . . which means they can be sold at a much better price . . . $40 a pair, as against around $65 if they were still imported from Switzerland . . . Moreover, lasts have been adapted for the Canadian market . . . which will make Bally shoes better fitting than ever! . . . This week we saw the new fall models at Munday's . . . to whom Bally shoes are exclusive in Victoria . . . "Paula" is a dressy shoe in brown or black kid, with a little gold-tipped ornament on the front . . . You'll notice that all the Bally shoes have a mid-heel and rounded toes . . . "Nicole" is a smart, high-fitting gored pump with wrapover ornament . . . Comes in either black or grey kid . . . Another high-fitting gored pump is named "Pat" . . . It's suede in a multi-patchwork effect in shades of rust and brown . . . Extremely well-fitting, Mr. Munday tells us . . . as is "Nova", a shoe in camel calf, with moccasin vamp and Gucchi type buckle . . . And when we single these out as being well-fitting, don't think the others aren't . . . it's just that these are high and foot-hugging! . . . Finally, ther's a real comfy walking shoe called "Natalia" . . . It's very dark brown suede with a crepe sole, and narrow leather "mudguard" . . . this latter not only ornamental but protective, as well! . . . Be sure to see the new Ballys at . . . Munday's 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Homemade jams—more of everything for less

By MARY MOORE

The main attraction of this jam is its flavor and color. Furthermore, it was relatively easy to make.

The flavor is predominantly peach but the plums and lemon juice that are added give it a delicious tang.

FALL FRUIT JAM

4 cups chopped peeled peaches (about 6 large)
4 cups chopped peeled pears (about 5 large)
1 cup chopped stoned plums (unpeeled)
1 cup chopped peeled apples
2 tbsp. lemon juice
5 cups sugar

To peel the peaches scald them in boiling water 1 minute. Drain, then chill in cold water. Drain and peel. Slice into preserving kettle. Quickly add prepared pears, plums and apples. Mix well to prevent pears and apples discoloring. Bring to boil and cook 15 minutes, stirring almost constantly. Now add the sugar and lemon juice and boil gently for about 50 minutes, stirring frequently. Time will depend on diameter of preserving kettle. Test a large spoonful on a saucer by standing it in your freezer compartment until chilled. If the surface is wrinkly when disturbed with a spoon, it will be of jam consistency when cold.

Pour into about 7 one-cup size jars and seal with hot paraffin at once. Cover with lids. When cool, wash and label with name and date.

Too Many Moves

DEAR ABBY: Last year I enrolled in a night class and found myself very much attracted to my professor. He's in his middle thirties, and I'm 22. I purposely got a ride to class one night and asked him if he would give me a ride home. He did, and we sat in front of my house talking for over an hour, and I know he enjoyed it as much as I did.

He didn't ask to see me after that, but I could tell he was very conscious of me. Thinking he needed a bit more encouragement, I wrote him a note telling him I wasn't looking for an affair, just a friendship. He didn't acknowledge the note so I dropped by his office to ask if he had received it. He said he had, but he didn't want to get involved."

I asked him what he thought of me, and he said: "I think you are 'nice,' but it's not a good idea for us to see each other outside of school."

Abby, I can't forget him. I think he could care for me if he would let himself. Why is he fighting me? I'm not the kind of girl who usually throws herself at men, but I would give anything if I could win him over.

How can I get my foot in the door? — Digs Him

DEAR DIGS: First get your foot out of your mouth. I fear you've already turned him off with your agressiveness. Cool it. If there is to be any next move, he will have to make it. But don't be disappointed if he doesn't.

DEAR ABBY: Our next door neighbors are lovely people. They are both in their early sixties. Well, "Mister" loves to smoke cigars, and "Mrs." will not let him smoke cigars in the house, so he goes out in the backyard and smokes up a blue storm every evening after supper. Their backyard joins ours.

We have a picnic table in our backyard, and enjoy eating outside, but the fumes from his cigar drift to our dining area and spoil my appetite. There's not much of a breeze here.

There are nice neighbors, always giving us flowers, and vegetables from their garden. Should we say anything? Or just eat indoors? I can't take that cigar smoke. Neighbors.

DEAR NEIGHBORS: Try diverting the cigar pollution with an electric fan. I am no smoke-lover, but any man who enjoys his cigar so much he lets his wife chase him out of the house to smoke it needs sympathy and a little compassion.

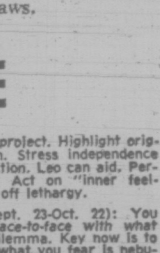
DEAR ABBY: A few years ago I had a vasectomy. My wife's gynecologist is well aware of this fact. Knowing this, he prescribed birth control pills for my wife.

Don't you think a proper doctor should have consulted me for my opinion before doing this?

I love my wife, but she insists that what she does with her body is her own business. Confused in Vancouver

DEAR CONFUSED: Why the confusion? A proper doctor's first responsibility is to prescribe for his patient's needs. I'd say your wife's doctor is doing just that.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report



By Dr. WALTER ALVAREZ

In that fine little journal "Statistical Bulletin," I read that in 1972 there were about 472,000 blind persons in North America. About half of these unfortunates are 65 years of age or older. Only a tenth are under 20, and in them the major causes of the blindness are prenatal cataracts (cataracts that the infant was born with); diseases of the optic nerve that runs from the back of the eye (retina) to the brain; and a disease called retrolental fibroplasia (something wrong with the fibrous tissue back of the lens of the eye).

At age 65 and over, disease of the retina is likely to be responsible for more than a quarter of the blindness. Glaucoma (an increase in the pressure within the globe of the eye) and cataract (a frosting of the lens of the eye) account for about a sixth of the total.

Among persons between the ages of 20 and 44 disease of the optic nerve that runs from the retina to the brain was the second most important cause. The incidence of blindness increases with age.

It is a good idea for anyone who senses some even slight loss in vision to go immediately to an ophthalmologist or eye specialsist.

TENNIS TOE

Podiatrists are reporting that they are seeing more and more frequently a condition which they are calling "tennis toe," in which the patient comes in with severe, throbbing pain beneath the toenail, a purple discoloration under the nail, and swollen toes. The discoloration comes from hemorrhaging under the nail, and usually affects the big toe and the one next to it.

Dr. Harold Roth, a Los Angeles podiatrist who discussed the new disease at the recent meeting of the American Podiatry Association, said, "The disease is caused by popular new brands of (tennis) court shoes which give such good traction that the foot is forced to the front of the shoe in sudden stops, thus traumatizing the nail."

Part of the problem is that tennis court surfaces are usually composed of hard materials such as wood or concrete, which are harder on the feet than the softer courts of clay or grass.

So far, no definite treatment has been found for the trouble, except the giving of pain killers if the pain is severe, but it helps to use sneakers of adequate size with a soft, pliable box toe. People usually have pain that lasts for weeks or even several months, before the symptoms finally go away.

CANCER IN THE MOUTH

It is becoming more and more important for dentists to learn to spot cancer of the jaw and tongue. Dr. Donald Demkee and Dr. Henry M. Cherrick told in the Journal of the American Dental Association, of the many cases in which cancer of the lung spreads up into the lower jaw; also cancer from other parts of the body, such as the breast, lung, prostate, kidney thyroid gland and testes can have a daughter growth in one of the jaws.

Even the flavour of lowly hamburgers can be greatly enhanced by preparing them with wine. The same magic can be applied to many other popular dishes.

A well-known Canadian winery has published a 10-page collection of mouthwatering "Recipes", all calling for the addition of wine. Whether your family's taste tend towards Fish Steaks in white wine, Consomme burgundy, Salmon Salad sauterne or Swiss Steak with red wine, every one of these dishes will have a delightful and, perhaps for you, novel flavour.

The leaflet also discusses wine marinating. It explains that marinating simply means 'to let stand'. In the preparation of meat, wine marinating serves a double purpose. It not only helps to tenderize tough cuts, it also adds a delicious flavour to meat that might otherwise be rather tasteless.

Wine marinating is easy. Simply pour some table wine over the meat and let it stand for a few hours before cooking. During the marinating, turn the meat a few times. With thin cuts of meat, even one hour's marinating will work wonders. But roasts need to be marinated for several hours. You can use left-over marinade to baste the meat.

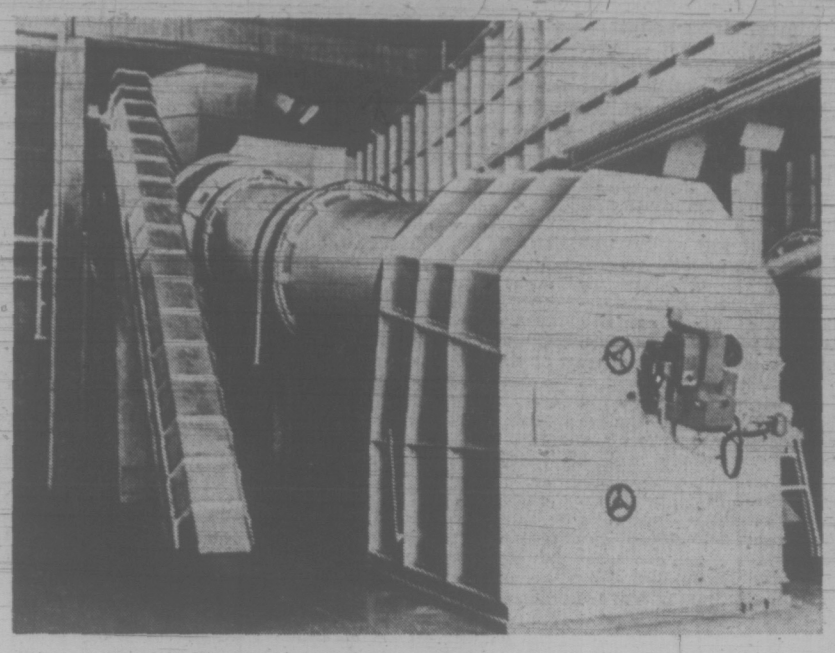
Canadians Produce a Ton of Garbage Yearly

By ELMO CIPRIETTI
CP Staff Writer



Disposal Kilns Would Replace Seagull Feeding Stations

Canadians produced a ton of garbage each last year and racked their brains to dispose of it, while gulls and scavengers attacked the problem with great efficiency in coastal cities.

As Canadians raised an outcry about pollution caused by garbage, action groups were formed across the country to find new methods of recycling or disposing of it.

The Ecology Action Centre in Halifax, Pollution Probe and Group Against Garbage (GAG) in Toronto and similar groups in other cities planned new uses for garbage.

A Toronto area plant this year began converting sewage into drinking water for 1,000 suburban residents. A project in Windsor, Ont., uses human waste for fertilizing vegetables.

Garbage is being made into ski hills; it is being burned to produce heat and electricity.

Ground Glass is being used in road pavement and for making concrete blocks.

But, in spite of dozens of projects and study groups financed by grants from the Local Initiatives Programs and Opportunities For Youth funds, old methods of garbage handling persist.

A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press shows most communities still rely on garbage dumps, or "sanitary landfill operations."

Landfill operations involve dumping the garbage in an open area, usually a gully or valley, and sometimes covering it with earth.

Since federal law prohibits the use of raw garbage, the refuse dumped at sanitary landfill sites receives some treatment — by chemicals, burning or burial under rock, ash or soil.

Incineration used to be the most common solution, until governments at all levels began fighting air pollution. Incinerators have been eliminated in Alberta and almost eliminated in British Columbia, with other provinces following the trend.

But a Toronto company, Technican Industries Ltd., hopes to reverse the trend with its non-polluting disposal kiln, which burns garbage at 2,000 degrees fahrenheit and retains all byproducts, including gases, ashes and odors.

The new Cyclops kiln, developed in Italy by Technitalia of Florence, reduces waste to five per cent of its original volume and can disintegrate glass and metal which can later be sold as scrap.

The traditional faults of the landfill disposal method are infestation by rodents and insects, production of explosive methane gas, seepage of pollutants into nearby water and continual low-grade combustion and decomposition.

The landfill dumps in coastal areas, have been a boon to scavenger birds. At Vancouver's Burns Bog landfill dump, gulls consistantly sift through garbage which accumulates at almost 500,000 tons a year.

The survey showed virtually no large-scale recycling of garbage with only a few experimental programs under way, but hundreds of studies made on garbage problems.

Its sheer amount is overwhelming. In addition to the five pounds of waste produced daily by each individual, in 1972, Canadians discarded three billion bottles, five billion cans, three million tons of paper, 750,000 old cars and 330 million tons of waste rock and ash.

Anti-pollution groups warned citizens of the dangers of littering and improper disposal. But in Hamilton a midsummer strike by garbage collectors and other municipal employees resulted in enormous raw garbage dumps downtown.

Garbage from Metropolitan Toronto continued to be a subject of controversy as nearby communities protested vigorously when plans were debated to transport garbage by rail to outlying areas.

Ski slopes made out of garbage mounds were in use, under construction or being planned for many communities, including the Toronto suburb of Etobicoke, Kitchener, Cornwall and Beeton, near Barrie, Ont.

Hamilton became the first Canadian municipality to undertake a system of recovering and recycling metal cans from household garbage.

SIGNS ON DOORS URGE MOSCOW CITIZENS TO DEVELOP 'MODEL COMMUNIST CITY'

MOSCOW (Reuter) — A Communist party announcement nailed to the doors of houses here calls on the population to help make Moscow a "model Communist city."

According to the manifesto, committees should be set up in every district of the capital to supervise the cleaning up of houses, particularly of their facades, gardens, courtyards, elevators, entrance halls and staircases.

This new campaign, with the slogan appealing for Moscow's transformation into "a model Communist city" repeated in large neon letters over the central Mayakovsky Square, is part of the latest Soviet effort to reorganize the capital.

The widening of streets to cope with Moscow's ever-increasing traffic is a constant concern here.

One of the ways to remove buildings interfering with the planners' vision is simply to transfer them to new sites.

The Moscow city council has set up a special department to deal with moving old buildings, an idea which is not so much an innovation here as a revival.

The only house to be moved in Czarist times was a two-storey block of flats which, housing a childrens' library and painted a dirty mustard color, still stands at No. 32 Kalanchevskaya Street, 75 years later.

The cost of moving that building was 20 per cent that of the original building but that of moving a modern high-rise block of flats is estimated at 40 to 45 per cent of the building cost, according to a report prepared by the Moscow Museum of History and Reconstruction.

When the first house was moved in 1898, all the chimneys, stoves, doors and window-frames were taken out to lighten its weight and it took 46 workmen nine days to pull it back 55 yards.

Soviet engineers now boast that modern blocks of flats have been moved during the night while all the occupants were asleep, without so much as the water, gas, electricity, telephone or drainage being cut off.

Nearly 50 buildings were moved between 1935 and the Second World War during the first plan for the reconstruction of Moscow, which also represented a drab period in Soviet architecture.

About half a dozen buildings now are scheduled for removal although Moscow engineers have not yet decided on the cheapest method to be used.

The traditional one used so far in the Soviet Union is by lifting the house on to a track of close-fitting rails and then moving it by means of electrically-driven pulleys placed between the rails.

The most important building scheduled for removal is the Museum of Architecture which must make way for the widening of Kalinin Prospect.

Arts Council In New Office

The Community Arts Council of Greater Victoria is open for business in a new office in the Law Chambers Building in Bastion Square.

Council president Erika Kurth said the move represents a feeling of the board of directors that the council should make itself more physically accessible to the arts community and the public.

The old council office was located on Lansdowne Road near Camosun College.

"We've moved because we want to be in the core, available to artists and the community. We have a responsibility to provide a central meeting place and to be directly in touch with artistic energies," Kurth said.

"We're especially happy to have found quarters in the Old Town because this is where much of the arts activity centres in Victoria," she said.

The council has arranged a meeting Sunday at the Open Space of representatives from arts councils all over Vancouver Island.

The purpose of the meeting is to prepare for the Arts Access Conference at Simon Fraser University next month.

Maple Trees Mark Time Man's Birth

KIRKCALDY, Scotland (CP) — Amid a stand of young maple trees from Ontario, Canadians and Scots met Friday to dedicate a plaque ommemorating Sir Stanford Fleming, Scottish-born Canadian engineer who devised standard time.

This town across the Firth of Forth from Edinburgh was Fleming's birthplace, which he left in 1845 at age 18 for Peterborough Ont., to make his name in Canada.

The plaque was presented by Ward Cornell, Ontario agent-general in London, on behalf of the province's ministry of colleges and universities, and accepted by John B. Day, provost of Kirkcaldy.

A similar ceremony was held in Peterborough today, sponsored by the Peterborough County Historical Society.

Fleming's concept of a world-wide, uniform system of reckoning time was adopted at a Washington conference in 1884. This won him broad recognition, though he was a man of many talents and interests.

He made the first maps of Peterborough and other Ontario cities, was chief engineer of the Intercolonial Railway from the Maritimes to Quebec, designed Canada's first postage stamp and was engineer-in-chief of surveys for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

GRAPES ARE FLOWING down on the Niagara Peninsula as the wine-making season comes around again. The annual harvest will be kicked off again this weekend by the Niagara Grape and Wine Festival. It's been estimated the total 1973 crop will reach 65,000 tons. Wine from these grapes will reach tables across Canada in about two years as a bright sparkling white wine.

'White Australia' Fading Fast

By VINCENT STOVE

SYDNEY (FWF) — More Asians than ever before are now living in Australia. There are more black Africans, too, as well as more United States Negroes (although there has never been many of these).

And more of them will be allowed into the country in the future.

It is all part of the new Labor government's planned intention to obliterate the spectre of the "White Australia Policy" which has long been the albatross around the nation's neck in its dealings with its Asian neighbors.

But while the emphasis will be on defusing the emotive racial aspects of "White Australia" by a more humane operation of immigration policies, there will not be a complete reversal of Australia's traditional immigration pattern.

Popular Immigration Minister Albert Grassby does not envisage "yellow hordes" from Asia flooding into Australia — mainly because, he believes, these "yellow hordes" are just not interested in mass emigration.

But what if shiploads of Asians and other non-Europeans did want to come to Australia?

A purely hypothetical question, according to immigration officials. However, the answer is quite clear — they would not get in.

But hopefully there will be no more of those harrowing scenes at airports and wharves when non-whites were deported (sometimes to be separated from other members of their families) after being hunted down like fugitives.

Australia's Labor government which came to power late last year under Gough Whitlam is more concerned with laying the "White Australia Policy" to rest, rather than purposely creating a multi-racial nation.

Labor policy provides for "the avoidance of discrimination on any grounds of race or color of skin or nationality," but it also recommends "the avoidance of the difficult social and economic problems which may follow from the influx of people having different standards of living, traditions and cultures."

It is significant that Labor is the front-runner in promoting enlightened immigration reforms, since it played a major role in formulating the concepts that gave birth to the "White Australia Policy," and over the years has been its most consistent supporter.

During the second half of the last century Pacific Islanders were imported into Australia to work on the sugar fields and in other tropical industries under an indentured system — but which in reality was not much better than slavery. Australian workers with families to support could not compete in the labor market against these imported non-whites who worked long hours under appalling conditions for food, shelter and very little else.

Labor leaders saw non-whites as the greatest threat to the working conditions and economic security of Australian workers. They successfully campaigned for a blanket ban on the entry of all non-whites, whether they were Pacific Islanders, Asians or Africans.

Tight restrictions on the entry of non-whites became the official policy of the Australian Labor Party.

This policy was carried out by both Labor and non-Labor governments after Australia became a nation at the turn of the century through the Immigration Restriction Act.

This legislation did not specifically prohibit the entry of non-whites as long-term residents or immigrants, but it was always employed in such a way to keep them out.

One effective method used was the dictation test.

The purpose of this test was to determine an applicant's ability to understand and write English.

But if the applicant happened to be non-European he was often subjected to tests in Greek or Greek or any other language he would not understand.

But although the White Australia Policy had its origins in economic necessity, it gradually assumed the appearance, and in many respects the substance, of a racist policy.

However, some 10,000 non-Europeans have been entering Australia annually in recent years. And immigration reform advocates maintain the number could steadily increase without the accompanying racial problems of America or Britain.

They point out that the situation in Australia is not clouded by a history of enslavement and exploitation of the Negro as in the United states, nor is it hampered by the sudden influx of impoverished African and Asian immigrants into crowded cities as in Britain.

Careful selection, of course, has been an important element in the entry of non-whites, and this will continue.

A black mathematics professor or a Chinese surgeon would have no integration problems.

Nor would most educated non-whites. But poor and uneducated non-Europeans would unhappily generally find themselves treated much the same as most of Australia's black aboriginals — second-class citizens living in the worst residential areas, with few job opportunities, and harassed rather than protected by state police forces.

"If you have enough money in Australia then you are accepted whatever your color or race," said United States Negress and former entertainer Issa Rose, who is married to a white Australian.

They live in upper middle-class affluence in a respectable Sydney neighborhood. She is one of the charity-committee-cocktail-party set. Her photograph may appear in the social pages.

She has not met any prejudice, nor been the victim of racial abuse. But she said: "I think if more blacks come to Australia, like the West Indians to England, then there would be resentment on the part of the average Australian, prejudice would be highlighted, and you would have much the same problems as there are in the United States."

Reginald Maher, a prominent Anglo-Indian who has settled in Australia, applauds the move away from White Australia, but he is not in favor of the unrestricted entry of non-whites.

A former journalist and author of These Are The Anglo-Indians, Maher believes there are four elements needed to ensure integration: the ability to eat and drink together; talk the same language; profess the same faith; and have similar cultural backgrounds.

Australia's ability to absorb

Australia's ability to absorb Asian immigrants who have at least some of these elements is well illustrated in the streets of Perth, state capital of Western Australia, on the Indian Ocean coast.

More Asians may be seen in Sydney, but they are mostly students attending one of the city's three universities or the many other colleges of advanced education.

But in Perth they are family people, settled in the suburbs. They number almost 15,000 of the city's total population of 700,000.

They go to work with other Australians. They tend to favor employment in the government departments — some are even in the state police force.

Their children go to school with white children, and at sports they excel at basketball and hockey.

Whatever friction there is between these Asians and the whites is no more than that which exists between Australians and European immigrants.

Tradition-Bound Arabs Rebuild on Flood Site

By PAULINE SEARLE

QASAB, Oman (Reuter) — Villagers near Qasab cling so tightly to their traditional ways that they are rebuilding on the sites from which their homes were swept in a flood in July.

It will be no great disaster when the next flood down the wadi, or dry watercourse, rips away their homes of woven palm: Relief tents and supplies can be flown in quickly from Muscat, Oman's capital 230 miles away to the southeast.

But the traditionalist attitudes of the people of Musandam, a rugged particle of Oman at the tip of the northeast Arabian Peninsula, pose problems for the sultanate's government.

Development here struggles against a situation where many people have never even heard of Muscat and many more are unaware—or refuse to accept—that Muscat is also Musandam's capital.

SPLIT FROM MUSANDAM

Even without its unpromising geography of deep ragged-edged inlets, mountains up to 7,000 feet dropping sheer to the sea and desolate rocky islands, Musandam would have difficulty catching up with modern times. The political geography does not help either.

Musandam is split from the rest of the sultanate by the United Arab Emirates and most of the peninsula's young men go off to work in the UAE city of Dubai. Their wages are paid in the currency circulating widely here, the UAE dirham.

There are only three villages of any size, sited where wadis spread wide enough on meeting the sea to provide flat land for worthwhile cultivation.

For all the problems, though, a start is being made.

Until 1970, there were no educational or health services in Musandam.

Today, both Qasab and the west coast village of Bakhah have a school each for boys and girls, and there is a boys' school at the east coast village of Bayah.

At Bakhah too, a school once financed by the government of Abu Dhabi in the UAE but never used is being turned into a boarding establishment for village boys from the mountains and inaccessible islands.

Strategically, Musandam is in a position vitally important not only regionally but in a world sense, dominating the Strait of Hormuz through which oil-laden tankers pass from the gulf to international markets.

Oman has no military establishments here worth mentioning. There was once a small naval station on Goat Island, in the extreme north, but it is abandoned, its jetty derelict.

CANAL ABANDONED

Other problems in Musandam are lack of fresh water and transport. The only possible transport is by air or sea, and even these are far from satisfactory.

A project to cut a canal at Ghubbah Dabshun, to save ships the long journey round the northernmost islands, was abandoned as not worth the money.

Only small planes can use the airstrips on levelled wadi beds, and Skyvans and Beavers of the Oman air force are the main means of transport.

Thanks largely to the military, no lives were lost in the recent flooding. Supplies reached the distressed area within hours.

The inhabitants, though just beginning to consider themselves Omanis, tend to regard Musandam as the only part of Oman, and Sultan Qaboos as their personal ruler.

With the people of Dhofar, 1,000 miles away to the south, taking much the same attitude, the government back in Muscat must sometimes feel it has three separate countries to rule.

PHNOM PENH (AP) — At least 27 persons in northwestern Cambodia died after drinking what was alleged to be adulterated rice wine imported from Thailand, health authorities said Friday.

Bridge of Dreams Under Construction

New York Times

ISTANBUL, Turkey — As the ferryboat passes below the new bridge that spans the Bosporus here, the passengers look up with something like wonder and a silence falls over the boatdeck, packed with travellers on a summer day.

A elder can be seen, swinging from a platform and showering down blue-white sparks that die in the 200-foot fall from the bridge to the cool green water. The passengers shout and wave, and the workmen high above wave back.

The graceful suspension bridge, stretching 3,540 feet over the Bosporus, is a novelty and the cause of some controversy in this old city, where the Byzantine fortifications of Constantinople and the domes and spires of great Ottoman mosques dominate the skyline.

The bridge, designed and constructed by English builders, provides the first permanent highway link between Europe and Asia. Leonardo da Vinci proposed the building of such a bridge to an Ottoman sultan in 1500, but for centuries it remained a dream. Now it has come about as a somewhat belated response to one of the city's most serious problems.

Modern Istanbul is a city of four million people who live in communities on both sides of the Bosporus waterway, which is about 15 miles long and has an average width of a mile.

The age of the automobile and the truck have put this historic crossroad city between East and West into an almost permanent traffic jam.

"Trucks wait for hours and sometimes days to get on ferries to cross the Bosporus. This is the main overland route for shipment of Turkish produce to Europe and for European goods and tourists to reach Anatolia, the central region of Turkey.

DIAMONDS 'RICH' JOKE

By RAM SUNDAR
CP Correspondent

BOMBAY (CP) — The people of Poona City, 110 miles from here, have just learned that it is not possible to become rich overnight—unless one wins a big lottery prize.

At sunset time a few days ago word went round the city that some people had picked up precious stones including diamonds and rubies in the Shankerseth and Shivalji Road areas.

Two factory workers showed their colleagues a dozen large "diamonds" they had acquired. Immediately, hundreds of people jumped on their cycles and scooters and headed for the areas.

Meanwhile, residents of two slum districts also heard the rumor. A woman filling her water pot at the public tap said: "My husband is now the owner of a matchboxful of diamonds. Maybe, they are worth a lakh of rupees (about $13,000)."

RUBIES SCARCE

Within about three hours, some 5,000 people were engaged in a search for the precious stones over a two-square-mile area. Since the municipal street lights were not bright enough to aid the search, they had brought torches and kerosene lanterns with them.

Almost everyone managed to lay his hands on a "diamond" or two. "Rubies" appeared to be rather scarce but, according to one estimate, a total of 1,500 of the stones were picked up by daybreak.

The Times of India News Service reported: "News about the precious stones spread like wild fire in the city. Men, women and children appeared happy with their acquisitions, firm in the belief that they had been blessed with a windfall."

From "diamond land"—as one columnist described the area—the lucky frantically got in touch with jewellers for an expert valuation of their newfound assets.

The verdict in each case was that the so-called diamonds and rubies were nothing but imitation jewels worth only a few cents each!

Govind Surve, a plumber, paid $10 for getting an expert's assessment on two large stones he had picked up after six hours of search in the semidarkness. He was told they were worth less than a dollar each.

Police believe that the hoax was the work of some employees of one of the many small outfits making imitation jewels.

NO CHARGES

A senior police official said no case had been registered "as it is not a criminal offence to play pranks."

But the poor of Poona City are not inclined to laugh at the hoax.

"This was a deliberate attempt to humiliate poor, humble citizens like me," said Surve, father of six small children. "Some wealthy men and their hirelings seemed to have derived a lot of fun at our expense."

One of the "lucky" many—Sakaram Koli, a fisherman—said his wife has had a nervous breakdown after knowing t hatthe rubies she had brought home were not genuine.

"A cruel joke by the rich on the poor," he commented bitterly.

Embassy Bombarded

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Two small explosive devices went off this week in the garden of the United States ambassador's residence in Buenos Aires, an embassy spokesman said. No one was hurt. Police said three devices were launched from a mortar-type launcher on a truck that was driven past the embassy by unidentified terrorists.

PROBLEM

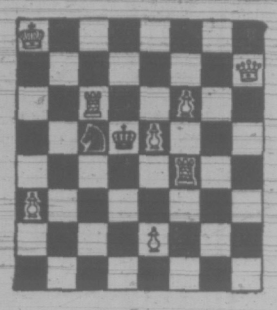
BLACK: 2



WHITE: 8

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

MASTERS AGAINST THE MACHINE

Both ex-World Champion Boris Spassky and Grandmaster Paul Keres played on June 30, 1973, against a computer at Birlinghoven Castle, near Bonn, West Germany. They were guests of Dr. Kurt Fischer, head of the Mathematics and Data Company (GMD), who has been working for over ten years to improve the chess-playing abilities of one of the company's computers. Only that day, Grandmaster Klauss Darga had fed into the machine the knowledge that it could castle Queen's side!!

Here are the two games:

WHITE: Spassky
BLACK: Computer

1.	P-K4	P-Q4
2.	PxP	QxP
3.	N-QB3	Q-Q1
4.	P-Q4	B-B4

16.	QxQch	K-B5
17.	Q-K5ch	K-N5
18.	Q-KN5	mate (b)

(a) After a bad opening, this was well-played. If 8 . . . P-B3; 9. PxP, PxP; 10. NxBP, etc. Some people already swear by the machine—but good players need not swear at it, for a long while yet!

(b) The "cold-blooded" machine always plays until mate!

(a) Overlooks(!) a piece.

(b) Let's at least give one check before we die!

(c) Wants to see what the computer will do here. What it did do was to promote its pawn into a Bishop instead of a Queen. Was it joking?

(A) Less accurate is 7 . . . 0-0; 8.P-B4.

(B) If 8.P-B4 or 8.R-K1 then . . . B-KN5 leads to level play.

(C) Stronger is 8 . . . B-KB4.

(D) Loses at least a pawn. Better was 15 . . . P-KN3.

The solution to the problem above is: 1.R-B4, KxRB5; 2.Q-Q3 mate, or 1 . . . KxRB3; 2.Q-QN7 mate; or 1 . . . KxP; 2.Q-R5 mate, or 1 . . . N-Q6; 2Q-K4 mate, etc.

Sire Aid Program

The department of agriculture said Friday grants ranging from $50 to $225 per animal are available under its sire assistance policy when cattle breeders buy superior performance-rated bulls.

The policy is two years old, but certain changes in the means of calculating grants on basis of annual weight gains by Aberdeen Angus, Hereford, Shorthorn, Galloway and Charolais bulls were contained in a department announcement.

Laymen Give Prisoners Legal Aid

HALIFAX (CP) — Prisoners at the penitentiary in Dorchester, N.B., will be able to obtain special legal services this fall thanks to a program initiated by Prof. I. B. Cowie of the law school of Dalhousie University here.

The program began with 17 persons here July 3 and continued for six weeks. It trained lay personnel capable of assisting lawyers in the operation of a legal aid service for the federal penitentiary.

Prof. Cowie said in an interview it is recognized that people in institutions, not only prisoners, are cut off from legal service because of physical segregation and a lack of communication.

The Dalhousie program was designed to cover a broad area of problems including family law, creditor-debtor law and certain areas of criminal law. The para-legal aides will be able to isolate areas of distress for prisoners and point them to qualified lawyers.

Prof. Cowie said that while there are no formal requirements for such work, the ideal would be to have former prisoners and former legal aid volunteers dealing with the problems faced by the prisoners.

He noted that a forerunner of the program was started last summer and became a great success. That program involved training para-legal personnel in divorce matters. The trainees then set up a matrimonial counselling service that "was so successful that we wanted to prove it could work elsewhere," Dr. Cowie said.

The program for Dorchester was suggested after a group of Dalhousie law students interviewed prisoners there and determined that some form of legal counselling was needed. Dr. Cowie said, "I hope the scheme will be a model for not only other penitentiaries across Canada, but will be applicable to other institutions."

Image Concerns New Grit Chief

WINNIPEG (CP) — The new president of the National Liberal Party, Senator Gil Molgat, has announced plans to establish greater communication between the party executive, the federal cabinet and the Canadias public.

Senator Molgat, elected party president last weekend at the Liberal's national convention in Ottawa, said one of the aims would be to improve the image of the Liberal government in the West.

He told reporters that meetings have been scheduled between the party executive and Prime Minister Trudeau and the privy council.

The meetings will be held every Monday, and will alternate between the prime minister and the council. In addition, the party executive will meet every Wednesday with members of Trudeau's advisory staff.

Senator Molgat, admitting there are "critical communications problems" between the Liberal party and the public, said the decision to hold the meetings came at the national convention.

The party executive also decided to hold its planning meetings in various parts of Canada, in conjunction with what the senator called "local Liberal events" in the areas.

Senator Molgat said the first such meeting will be held next month, in conjunction with the Ontario Liberal party's leadership convention in Toronto.

The senator said Trudeau definitely will attend the semi-monthly meetings.

FAMILY TUNED

TUNIS (Reuter) — President Habib Bourguiba, in an appeal for better family planning in Tunisia, told a meeting here that one man was able to form a full orchestra with his 40 children.

The man lived in the western Sahara town of Ksar Hellal, the president told a meeting of provincial governors Thursday.

"He is the father of 40 children born to him by four wives with whom he has created a complete orchestra," Bourguiba said.

Brewery, Church Get Together

TORONTO (CP) Through the unlikely combination of an Anglican Church, a large brewery and a Local Initiatives Program (L.I.P.) grant, people in Toronto finding themselves short of money and looking for a place to stay will soon find the answers.

The Toronto Study Guide, 251 pages on everything from cheap restaurants to free furniture, will sell for 50 cents and will provide its owner with what Toronto Mayor David Crobie describes as "a book that shows you how to get along in a major city on a low budget."

With $6,000 in L.I.P. grants, $5,000 from the brewery which has subsequently backed out of its sponsorship and $2,500 from the church to pay for printing, a copy of the guide costs about $2.93 to produce.

"Obviously, we didn't intend to make a profit on this, but we will probably raise the price on future editions as 50 cents is ridiculously low," a church official said.

SOVIET HISTORIAN TELLS OF 'THREATS'

MOSCOW (Reuter) — A Soviet art historian said today he was threatened with trial for "anti-Soviet activities" after sending manuscripts and photographs to the West.

The historian, Yevgeni Barabanov, 29, said in a statement state security police (KGB) searched his apartment Aug. 24 and called him in for questioning three days later.

The questioning showed that "for several months each day of my life was X-rayed, observed and traced," he said. He was threatened with imprisonment under a law which provides for a total of 12 years in prison, labor camp and Siberian exile, Barabanov added.

The historian said he "transmitted" the underground Chronicle of Current Events, unpubliished Soviet poetry and "photographs of modern persecuted public leaders and writers," but did not say how he sent the material.

He said his actions were not prohibited by Soviet law and added: "The persecution of free thought which has turned into a vicious tradition here cannot be justified by anything."

Barabanov said he sent the manuscripts and documents abroad because "the West granted the sole opportunity to save these documents and preserve them from physical extermination."

Hall Demolished Brick by Brick

EDMONTON (CP) — Ed and Ernstina Simon spent this summer in the midst of rubble, doing what a bulldozer might have done more quickly but also more carelessly.

The husband-and-wife demolition and salvage company took apart All Saints' Parish Hall brick by brick and board by board.

Mr. and Mrs. Simon bought demolition and salvage rights on the 53-year-old building for about $800. This included the right to keep or sell any part of the downtown building and its contents that All Saints' Anglican Cathedral did not wish to preserve or donate to museums.

"Today we sold the grand piano, and a lot of people have bought spruce and fir panelling," Mr. Simon said in an interview after he had been on the job three months. "One lady is using it to finish her basement.

"The church kept many of the stained glass windows, but we're keeping the big yellow one as a memory of this job."

IN GOOD SHAPE

The lumber they salvaged is a "better grade than you can buy today; even though it's used, it's strong and dry."

But perhaps the most valuable things the couple reclaimed are the thousands of old, red-fired bricks that are becoming so difficult to find and are fashionable for home decorating.

"My guess is we should be able to save 80,000 in all," Mr. Simon said.

Most of the bricks were contracted to an Edmonton masonry firm.

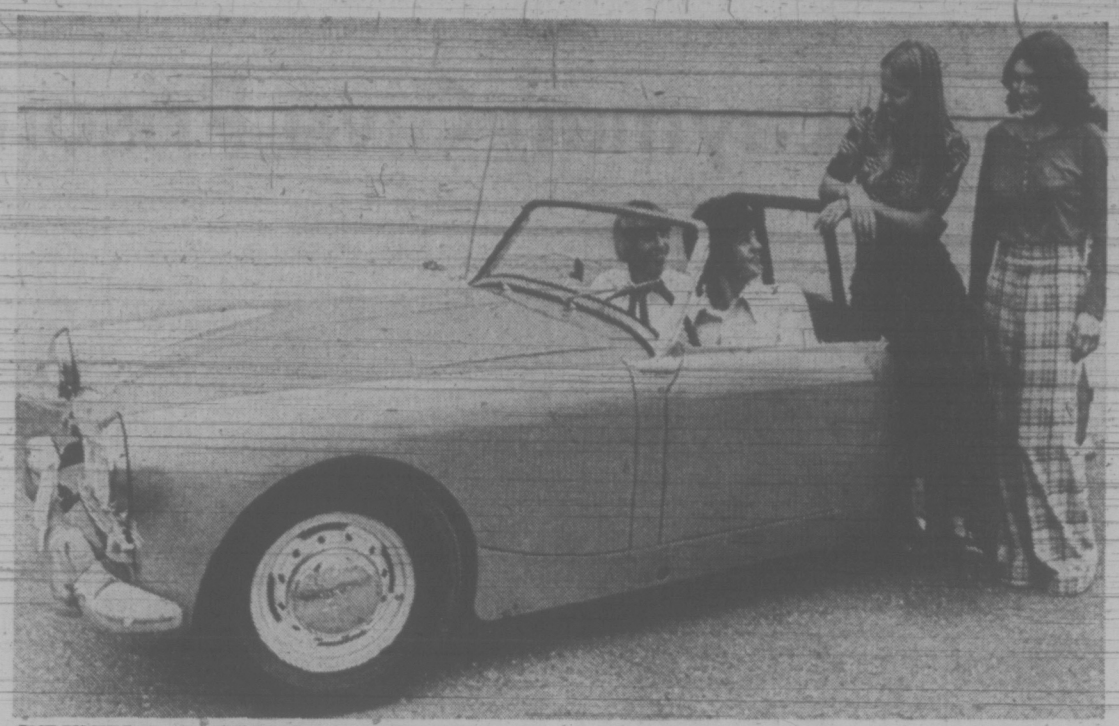
Mr. Simon saved about 12,000 bricks for his own home, which he plans to start building this winter. The rest were stockpiled on an Edmonton lot, to be cleaned and sold this winter.

The Simons can clean an average of 1,400 bricks a day.

"I don't believe in hauling any stuff to the garbage dump," said Mr. Simon. "What I can't sell I haul home. Not a stitch of this material will go to waste."

Mr. and Mrs. Simon, residents of Drayton Valley, Alta., rented an apartment in the city and worked 17 hours a day, seven days a week, painstakingly taking the building apart.

The parish hall was the church before 1955 when the present cathedral was built.



INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION students at Lansdowne junior high school completely rebuilt this 1962 Austin Healey Sprite as class project and will raffle it next month to continue program this year. Ties Renewed

BEIRUT (AP) — Saudi Arabia has resumed diplomatic relations with West Germany, ending an eight-year-old break. A foreign ministry statement said the two countries have also agreed to exchange ambassadors. Saudi Arabia was among 10 Arab states that severed relations with West Germany in 1965 to protest its recognition of Israel.

NO LOVE FOR MILITARY

ROME (AP) — Rome prostitutes are rejecting "love requests" from anyone wearing a military or police uniform.

They called the selective strike to protest government reprisals against a woman who has organized a league for the defence of prostitutes.

Titti Sciascia, 34, was suspended indefinitely at half pay last week from her job with the Italian postal system. She is awaiting disciplinary action for moonlighting as a model and posing in a topless costume on a bridge across the Tiber River.

Mrs. Sciascia's suspension came, however, two days after she formed her prostitutes' defence league.

"We have stopped going with the military, at least for the time being," said one prostitute. "This is our reply to the post office decision. Uniform means the state and the state means repression."

She admitted, however, that some of her colleagues may have given in to pleas by soldiers and policemen.

"I knew my battle for equal rights for prostitutes would be a tough one," Mrs. Sciascia said at a news conference. "A lot of patience is necessary, but I'm tough."

She is advocating legal prostitution in Italy with police protection.

Since a law made brothels illegal in 1958, prostitutes have turned to the streets by the tens of thousands, raising protests from citizens against the "immoral sight."

There are an estimated 16,000 professinal streetwalkers in Rome and several thousands amateurs.

Prostitutes complain they cannot get police permission to have driving licenses, landlords charge them excessively high rents and peddlers selling soft drinks and sandwiches on the streets charge them three or four times more than the normal price.

One of the main points of Mrs. Sciascia's league is to win legal recognition of prostitutes as "artisans." This would give them the right to pay contributions into a state fund providing free medical care and pensions.

Northern Settlements Want Liquor Rationed

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — An increasing number of Indian and Eskimo settlements in the North are asking the territorial government to ration alcohol in their communities, says Commissioner Stuart Hodgson.

"They're beginning to catch on," he said in an interview. "The liquor is killing them."

The chief of the Fort McPherson band in the Mackenzie Valley asked the commissioner last month to limit sales to local whites and natives to two bottles of liquor and one case of beer at any one purchase.

Complaints that the rationing is discriminatory or contradictory to human rights legislation have come from just one or two people in Inuvik, the commissioner said.

"We haven't had any complaints from Fort McPherson residents."

Fort McPherson, whose alcohol now has to be flown in from Inuvik, has also asked the government for a local beer outlet to be run entirely by the band council.

Local councils at Fort Rae, Pond Inlet, Pelly Bay, Arctic Bay and Igloolik have either asked the government for rationing or taken their own restrictive measures.

"Some places won't even let liquor in," said Mr. Hodgson. "At Arctic Bay they've asked me not to fill liquor mail orders."

However, residents of Cambridge Bay "just about blew the roof off" recently when their only local source of alcohol was closed for two months on an experimental basis.

Mr. Hodgson said he ordered the closure after receiving a government report on alcohol abuse at Cambridge Bay citing the effect of drunkenness on children.

The report said children often could not get into their homes because their parents and friends were drinking behind locked doors.

Alcoholism "is the worst problem we have and we're prepared to do aything reasonable to combat it," said the commissioner.

The government is conducting an alcohol education program featuring Captain Al Cohol, a comic book anti-hero.

The comic book program has already cost $26,000, and the government is willing "to double, even triple the budget, about $120,000 if necessary."

TOO MANY BORDERS

"We've talked about prohibition a lot and we've thought about it a lot," said Mr. Hodgson. "But we don't know how we'd do it. We're bordered by at least seven provinces and the Yukon. With all the planes and cars and trains and boats arriving here it would almost be impossible to stop bootlegging."

Ironically, the liquor sales that cause so many problems in the North are one of the government's biggest sources of revenue.

The government is attempting to resolve this paradox by finding private operators for retail liquor stores while remaining in control of prices and wholesale distribution.

The government has announced that its Yellowknife store—the most profitable of the eight outlets—will be taken over by a private operator in November. Three other outlets are already privately owned.

BRAIN SCANNER SAVES DAYS

MONTREAL (CP) — A computerized x-ray scanner which cuts to minutes from three days the time needed to evaluate brain scans, —the brainchild of a British recording firm—was unveiled Wednesday at the Montreal Neurological Institute.

The EMI scanner is the most important breakthrough in neurological diagnosis since the invention of x-rays" Dr. William Feindel, director of the institute said in unveiling the $35,000 machine.

The scanner, manufactured by the Electrical Musical Instrument Co., is expected to be in operation within two weeks.

It will take the institute that long to assemble the 5,000 pounds of equipment that arrived here from Great Britain early this month.

The machine, to be used as a screening test for almost all patients at the 135-bed institute, provides within minutes information which once took three days to accumulate.

Their Best Friends —Crocodiles

By NEWTON AMEDOFU

ACCRA (Reuter) — For the inhabitants of Paga, a small village on Ghana's northern border with Upper Volta, the crocodiles are their best friends.

For as long as people can remember, the crocodile has been a sacred animal to the men of Paga, a symbol of their tribe, and it has been taboo to kill it.

The crocodile's special place in the life of Paga has resulted in a phenomenon which would amaze zoologists, who have always been wary of this ancient race of reptiles which have been known on occasion to attack and eat men.

For the crocodiles of Paga play with the local children.

The game is called riding the crocodile. But don't let your own children try it on their next visit to the zoo for the result will certainly be a disaster.

In Paga, the crocodiles live in two ponds adjoining the village and, according to eyewitnesses, the game begins when a child emits a whistling sound. The snout and eyes of a crocodile emerge from the water, and it swims to the bank.

LIKE ROCKING HORSE

The boy then sits on the back of his playmate, holds its long, snout-like mouth, and starts to rock forwards and backwards.

The boy then dismounts from the crocodile, holds the heavily muscled tail with which the beast drives itself through the water, and begins to jerk it to the left and to the right.

The performance ends when the boy throws a live chicken to the crocodile to thank him for playing. The crocodile swallows it and creeps back into the pond.

About 5,000 tourists from the United States, Europe and neighboring African countries are estimated to have seen the phenomenon and visitors are only too glad to pay the price of a chicken for feeding the crocodile after such a spectacle.

The crocodiles feel so much at home with the villagers of Paga that they are even reported to lay their eggs in the village huts.

NO LOVE PAT, SLAP CAUSED SIX DEATHS

TEHRAN (AP) — A slap on the face resulted in a family feud that left six persons dead, the Tehran newspaper Kayan reported Wednesday. The newspaper said two tribal families in southeast Iran used guns to settle a dispute that began when a member of one family slapped a member of the other family.

DRUG GIVES HEART TO PUBLIC SPEAKERS

LONDON (CP) — Help is on the way for the nervous public-speaker.

A research team here has discovered that a drug used now in treating heart patients also removes many of the unpleasant symptoms that beset the jittery speech-maker.

However, a spokesman warns that the drug—trasicor—should only be used under medical advice since harmful side-effects could develop. Research is continuing.

The team monitored the physical reactions of 30 persons while they were speaking in public, using radio-electrocardiograph and other equipment. Aside from dryness of the mouth, hoarseness and voice change, many subjects suffered from palpitations with the heart beat racing up to 180 a minute, about double the normal rate.

In some vulnerable people, said team member Dr. Malcolm Carruthers, such a rate "may become alarming and even dangerous."

But the team found that when the drug was used it eliminated many of the unpleasant symptoms of nerves.

Now the British Heart Foudation has decided to subsidize the studies, and research to perfect it is continuing.

Nine Killed By Lightning

CALCUTTA (AP) — Nine persons were killed and 20 injured when lightning struck a tent sheltering spectators at a soccer tournament, authorities said today.

A state official at the tournament at Angul, 240 miles southwest of Calcutta, said six died in the tent, two en route to a hospital and one Thursday morning.

The 20 injured survivors were reported to be out of danger.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Bible Is Literature—And Much More

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

I have become just a little suspicious of those bright persons who reject the Bible as a religious book but who loudly sing its praises as literature, and especially those who profess great affection for the King James version.

Many of these people, I have found, are not at all well acquainted with the Bible.

Like many literary classics, the Bible seems to be a book about which informed person should know a little but which he or she need not actually read.

C. S. Lewis, the English literary scholar and lay theologian, once ironically pinpointed the issue in this way: "Those who read the Bible as literature do not read the Bible!"

And T. S. Eliot wrote "those who talk of the Bible as a 'monument of English prose' are merely admiring it as a monument over the grave of Christianity."

The claim for the Bible, as understood in Christian faith, is that God reveals himself to us in it and through it, that he communicates his will and love to us to help us find our way the predicaments of our existence.

Bernhard W. Anderson, an influential biblical scholar in the U.S. has described the Bible as "the rendezvous which God has chosen for meeting and speaking with man."

This is a stupendous claim, so stupendous that we must either accept it very seriously for the understanding of our existence or dismiss it as utterly preposterous.

The main kind of knowledge the Bible gives us can be indicated by the vague, fashionable word "existential": that is, the Bible can bring us to a special awareness of our existence, our existence as persons in our relations with God and with other persons and with our total environment.

Werner Pelz, an Anglican writer declares, "The Bible is not a book we can understand. It is a book in the light of which we begin to understand ourselves and the world."

The validity of this approach cannot be demonstrated by the procedures of logic and scientific method. But it can be proven, demonstrated, validated, in the experiences of faith. When we read the Bible in faith, and from faith and for faith, we become aware that it is, as one writer has put it, "The Word from beyond for our human predicament."

The Bible, of course, can and should be read as literature. We can recognize the authentic literary values in the biblical books and the beauty of the language in the King James version and in the better of the modern translations.

But the truth of the Bible, its "existential" truth, its truth for you in your human predicament in the here-and-now, can be yours only as you read it faithfully and prayerfully and expectantly.

The Bible is literature, and much more than literature.

Quaker Hanged But Won Battle

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP) —Mary Dyer told the governor, "This is the hour of my greatest joy." Moments later, she was hanged. But she won her battle, breaking an original pattern of state-imposed religion in the American colonies.

"She started something still with us, but we have to work to maintain it," says Manhattan lawyer-composer Richard Owen, who has written an opera about her, soon to have its premier performance in Boston where she was executed.

Although keeping government out of religious involvement still is a recurrent issue in American courts, Owen says it was the death of Mary Dyer that emblazoned the "principle of religious freedom" for the nation.

"It was one of America's first true cases of civil disobedience on religious-moral grounds," he says. "She determined to topple an outrageous law, and topple it she did. It put the state out of the business of controlling religion."

IS TRIAL LAWYER

Owen, 50, a practising trial lawyer who also has written other operas produced in the United States and abroad, some of them on Biblical themes, says the religious note is appearing increasingly in music and drama.

"We may well be entering a time when matters of spiritual value are coming to the fore in substantial measure, both in the arts and in other ways," he added in an interview.

As for the Mary Dyer story, he said: "It had all the elements of drama"—the clash between ruling government premises and an individual of high purpose and courage, whose ideals won out although she died for it.

"She may have been one of the first real women's liberationists, fighting for and achieving a basic right," he said. The theme of surrendering life for a good cause also is a keynote of faith in the ultimate triumph of right.

WIFE PLAYS ROLE

Owen's wife, Lynn Owen, a leading soprano in operas in Europe and the United States, including the Metropolitan, is to play Mary Dyer in the premiere of the new work Sept. 21-22 on the Boston Common where the heroine was hanged.

Although it sometimes is popularly implied that religious freedom existed from the start in America where the colonists had fled to escape religious regimentation in Europe, most colonies adopted similar regulations.

"They came to their 'Jew Jerusalem' to avoid persecution, but in most cases, they also demanded conformity to their religious positions," Owen said. "Mary Dyer came with other Quakers so they could worship the way they pleased."

But the Quaker way didn't fit the dominant pattern in Massachusetts where the Puritans held sway, their theocratic government collecting taxes for their church and requiring adherence to it.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: What is the best time to breed a bitch after she comes in heat? — L.B.

DEAR L.B.: The first part of the cycle, proestrus, lasts five to ten days from the first visible vaginal discharge to the beginning of active interest on the part of the female. Estrus, itself, lasts one to four days. At this point the bitch is, usually, at least passively and probably actively receptive. Usually the best time for breeding is between the tenth and twelfth days from the first signs of proestrus.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Does that form of chicken pox which affects pet canaries ever get bad enough to kill a bird?—F.O.

DEAR F.O.: Canary pox, commonly encountered in aviaries but rarely where only one pet bird is involved, can and often does kill affected birds.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My cat Tommy, gets so wound up and wild whenever I take him in the car, I've been advised to use a sedative. How do I know how much to use?—A.K.

DEAR A.K.: I recommend, particularly if you are doing the driving, that you don't take any. It may well be though a sedative or tranquilizer is a good idea for Tommy. It should probably be given about 45 minutes to an hour prior to the trip. You can't actually determine what to use nor the dosage, but Tommy's doctor can, based on his knowledge of your cat's size and nervous system. With or whithout a tranquilizer, your trips with Tommy will be safer for both of you if he makes them in a cat carrier.

MUSICAL DIPLOMACY

TOKYO (AP) — Chinese newspapers called members of the Philadelphia Orchestra "envoys of friendship from the American people," the official Hsinhua news agency reported Thursday.

The United States orchestra arrived in Peking Sept. 12 for a 10-day tour of China. It gave three performances in Peking and is scheduled to give two more in Shanghai before returning home.

Lady Truckers Sought For Britain's Highways

By CAROL KENNEDY

LONDON (CP) — Moves are afoot in Britain to lure women into heavy industrial jobs which have generally not been considered female territory since the manpower shortages of the Second World War.

The Road Haulage Association, which represents British trucking companies, is looking for women drivers to take the wheel of big juggernaut vehicles plying between British and continental cities. These giant trucks, thundering through the narrow roads of southeast England, are already causing bitter resentment in many small villages, but their numbers seem bound to increase now Britain is in the European Economic Community.

Trucking employers find demand for heavy-vehicle drivers far outstripping supply, a situation likely to be sharpened under EEC regulations which limit the hours a driver may be on the road.

The Road Haulage Association says there is no reason to suppose women could not cope with many heavy driving jobs and adds: "There is certainly no bar to them trying." This perhaps underestimates the steely strength of nerve a woman trucker would have to possess to face the jibes of her male counterparts in a crowded highway cafe.

One who has the necessary cool is Liz Knight, 22, a Leicestershire farmer's daughter who recently signed on for a training course in driving rigid four-wheeled trucks—other categories are articulated trucks and six or eight-wheel rigid vehicles.

Meanwhile, former Warwickshire secretary Judy Smith, 23, has already started her own long-distance trucking business, in which she drives one of two 32-ton Scandia trucks with a 40-foot trailer and does all her own maintenance. On the continent she drives a 45-tonner. The first time she tried out a friend's 20-ton automobile transporter, she says, it was "love at first sight."

The Road Haulage Association admits there is prejudice against women on the road. Some freight bosses point out that the job entails not only driving but also loading and stacking such heavy goods as timber or lead pipes. But the trucking association maintains women should be able to handle such freight as gasoline, milk or containers, which are mechanically loaded.

London Transport, currently squeezed by a crippling staff shortage on its buses and subway trains, would like to see women at the wheel of its eight-ton double-deckers. The transport union is also in favor but up till now the bus drivers themselves have consistently voted to keep women out.

The question is being raised again in talks between London Transport and the union aimed at working out ways of improving recruitment. The hope is, says a London Transport spokesman, that the union can persuade its driver members to soften their anti-women prejudice, although recruiting women would probably only make a minor dent in the driver shortage, now numbering 3,000.

Elsewhere in Britain, a Nottinghamshire gravel company is hiring women to drive heavyweight trucks, excavators and mechanical shovels on the grounds they "seem to be more careful than the men."

A steel foundry in Leicestershire recently signed on 30 women for the first time since the war. Working a "twilight shift" from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., the girls are mostly employed as "fettlers," trimming the rough edges from the steel castings. The foundry, situated in a mainly agricultural area, now has a waiting list of women applicants.

The publicly-owned British Steel Corp., which owns the Leicestershire foundry, is considering widening the range of its jobs available to women, which hitherto have been mostly in dispatch, inspection and testing. Women have been hired as moulders in other BSC foundries and one is employed as a welder.

Church Goers Get Their Fill

By SYD COURSON

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — "If gas will get you to heaven, then I'm going to get there," said Dr. James L. Robertson, minister of Arlington Temple.

Robertson's church may be unique, for while he administers to spiritual needs upstairs, his flock's cars are being gassed up down below at a station that is part of the church building.

"If they pump as much down there as I do up here, we'll gradually fill 'em up," the United Methodist minister said.

The temple's arrangement with the oil company is profitable to both. The church gets two cents for each gallon sold. The revenue makes up about a third of the church's budget, which was $105,000 this year.

The unlikely alliance is directly across the Potomac River from Washington, D.C., just off Key Bridge.

"The bishop appointed me to organize and build a church here, because in the midst of a resident population of 25,000 and a working population of another 30,000, there was no church," said the 61-year-old Dr. Robertson.

The land was given to the church in 1971. Dr. Robertson asked the oil company whether it would be interested in a working agreement. The company was, and that's how it began.

Arlington Temple was perhaps the only church in the country that might have been directly hurt by the gas shortage. But Dr. Robertson said business never fell off—either downstairs or upstairs.

"The good Lord looked out for us. We asked for some heavenly gas as well as heavenly grace.

"The station is going full blast. I go down there and pray for them a lot.

"They used to say 'the sweetest music this side of heaven' came from Guy Lombardo's band." But now it comes from that little bell that rings every time a car drives into the gas station."

The temple has only about 300 members, but Dr. Robertson said more than half of those attending services are non-members.

"It's a United Methodist Church, but they put me here to create sort of an ecumenical movement, and that's what I'm trying to do," he added.

So in this Methodist church, Protestant services are conducted on Sundays and Thursdays, and a Catholic priest drops by every Friday to say Mass.

A Message to the Premier of British Columbia

DAVE BARRETT

Why are federally inspected and C.S.A. approved mobile homes not recognized by provincial inspectors on private rented lots?

Why is it 90% of all mobile homes which exist in mobile home subdivisions are not subject to provincial inspectors? Why should those senior citizens, and others who choose to buy a mobile home and place it on a private rental lot, be subject to "rip-off fees" to a construction engineer and building permits?

Why does the make, model, and price mobile home, when situated in a mobile park subdivision, not come under provincial inspection and engineers? Why are owners of mobile homes which are placed on a rented lot of land subject to a further tax by the month? The electrical code for a hook-up is the same on both sides of the road, if cement blocks and skirting is the accepted practice in mobile home subdivisions then it should be accepted anywhere.

You have made it publicly known that your government intends to bring in low cost homes for senior citizens. It has already arrived on six wheels; it's provincial and regional inspectors who are killing it. We all voted for a change, not a switch.

I wish to personally take you, at your convenience, into the Langford, Florence Lake area, so that a fair law could be passed for all, not a privileged few.

RCMP MAN ABOARD ILLEGAL FISHBOAT

VANCOUVER (CP) — An RCMP officer who was aboard a commercial fishing boat involved in illegal fishing charges has been "disciplined" with a warning, a spokesman for the force said.

The officer, a Haney detachment sergeant, was found aboard the fishing boat which was ordered ashore by an RCMP patrol boat in the Fraser River in August. The fishing vessel owner has since been charged with using an unlicensed boat in a commercial fishing operation.

"The officer has been informed that he was wrong to be aboard this vessel, and to watch his step in future," said the RCMP spokesman.

DUNCAN AREA OPPORTUNITIES
1 SERVICE STATION AND CAFE on main intersection, this double bay service station could be a winner. Independently owned, no hard bound oil contract, pumping over 100,000 gallons. Separate building for cafe, lots of parking. Excellent equipment. A gold mine for some live wire. North of Duncan. Price $149,500.

2 AUTO WRECKERS
This is no messy, sprawled out junk heap. Here is a neat tidy business with parts all tagged, and laid out neatly, and the wrecks placed in proper and orderly fashion. The owner has made a fine living for many years and wants to retire. There is a fine big new building for the repair work and stock, there is a nice 3 bedroom modern home. Paved road frontage and good equipment. Full price is just $60,000 for everything.

3 GENERAL STORE AND COFFEE SHOP
Come and see how to earn a decent living without threats of strikes, layoffs, etc. and be in an area of lake fishing and good hunting, about 20 miles from Duncan. Groceries, drugs, drygoods, snack bar, housed in a good sound building with excellent equipment. The building is leased for 25 years at a very nominal amount. Investigate this one, because the price of $55,000 is realistic.

BCFP Hikes Dividend

British Columbia Forest Products Limited has announced third quarter dividends of 15 cents per common share and 75 cents per preferred share.

Directors meeting in Victoria declared dividends payable Nov. 1 to shareholders of record Oct. 5.

BCFP president Ian Barclay noted the common share dividend is an increase from the former rate of 10 cents. Because BCFP common shares were split two for one earlier this year, the new rate was, in effect, a 20 per cent increase over the rate of 25 cents paid from May 1965 to February 1971, he said.

During a period of sharply reduced earnings in 1971, the company did not declare a common share dividend in two quarters and when reinstated in November that year did so at the reduced rate of 10 cents.

Fatal Touch

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. (AP)—A 10-year-old girl preparing to go horseback riding was killed after coming in contact with a low-voltage electric fence around a pasture, officials said. Police said the girl was barefoot and standing on wet grass when she touched the wire. Authorities said the charge was too small to kill an adult or a cow, but the girl's small size and the grounding conditions helped make the shock fatal.

Next Problem: Suitable Storage

GARDENING
jack beastall

There has been a big increase this year in the number of home gardeners growing vegetables and fruits. The crops have been quite good, and the next step is to find suitable storage space.

The designers of the modern home seem to have thought up a place for everything and for every purpose excepting the storage of garden vegetables. Even the space under the front steps, a perfect storage space in the older homes, is no longer designed to be useful.

The length of time any fruits or vegetables will remain in storage before sprouting or decaying is directly dependant on the temperature and the moisture content of the air.

The practice of storing food crops has been developed to a science. Today we know the exact temperature and humidity needed for all kinds of fruits and vegetables, but this information is of little use to most of us home gardeners because our dry homes contain nothing that could be called a storage room.

All we can do is store our produce in the best conditions we can find and enjoy what we can before deterioration goes too far.

Even without ideal storage conditions we can lengthen the storage life of both fruits and vegetables by handling them with the greatest of care.

So often we see home gardeners shaking fruit from the trees, or throwing it down for someone to catch. All this rough handling causes bruising, which is actually damaged cells, and damaged cells are the start of storage troubles.

I once spent a summer vacation with a fruit and vegetable grower. He pointed out to his employees that it is not the quantity that is harvested in an hour, but the number of unblemished specimens that would keep safely for the entire natural storage period. He told us to handle each fruit and vegetable as if it were the only one in the world. Even then, he predicted, some would be bruised.

It is difficult to account for the rough manner in which some home gardeners handle their produce, throwing potatoes around like rocks and dumping fruits from pails into boxes like so much sand. Surely, after all the work and worry we have invested in them, that investment is worth protecting with the greatest care in handling.

Before we start harvesting, some kind of space must be prepared for storing. If you have shelves on which fruits are usually stored, these shelves should be thoroughly washed and scrubbed with a mild disinfectant solution because they will be covered with disease spores left by fruits that rotted last year.

The same applies to boxes, barrels and sacks, whether fresh or used last year. They will all carry some kind of spores which are best eliminated before new crops are put in them.

Each variety of apple and pear has a certain date for picking. If you know the variety the Dept. of Agriculture can give you the approximate picking date. This is important for late varieties since they are left on the trees until they reach a certain stage of maturity, otherwise they will not store properly. Dates for this area range from mid-August into October.

Apples must be spread out to sweat for four or five days before being put into containers, then carefully boxed and stored at 34 to 40 degs. F. with high humidity, about 75 per cent.

Pears can be stored at 34 to 40 degs. F. in low humidity, around 50 per cent. Bartlett pears and early apples are only good for three to four weeks and should be used or processed soon after picking.

Potatoes can be stored with apples, for it has been found that the gas given off by the apples delays the sprouting of the potatoes.

Carrots that have to be stored are best kept in sand to prevent loss of moisture, and the same with other root crops. Use a wooden box with two inches of sand beneath the bottom layer and two inches between each succeeding layer.

Carrots sown in mid-July will be lifted as needed. Earlier sowings to be stored must be lifted as they reach maturity to prevent continued growth and splitting of the roots. Also, earlier sowings left in the soil can be severely damaged by the larvae of the carrot rust-fly.

Parsnips and leeks are left in the garden to be dug as needed. Parsnips are better flavored after a few frosts, and leeks can be used during the colder weather in January and February after the storage onions are finished.

Onions and garlic like 40 to 45 degs. F. and 50 per cent humidity. The chemistry of both these bulbs changes when the green shoot appears in the centre, which is usually in February.

Squash, marrows, and tomatoes need warm dry conditions for storage. The best temperature is between 50 and 55 degrees with humidity not more than 50 per cent.

Sometimes a small room or large cupboard in a basement can be adapted to cool moist storage conditions.

It is necessary to insulate the walls and ceiling and provide adequate ventilation. Usually cold moist air is admitted from just above grade level and carried through a six-inch stove pipe to within a few inches of floor level, the quantity of air being controlled by an ordinary stove pipe damper which is adjusted to suit outdoor conditions.

An escape vent for the warmer air and the gases given off by the different fruits and vegetables is located near the ceiling.

For the crops needing warm dry storage, the cupboard or room is ventilated into the basement, making sure the vents are of ample size for good air circulation.

Many home gardeners forget that crops in storage are still living things that respire as long as the cells remain sound. Lack of fresh air, either cool and moist or warm and dry, can cause rapid deterioration.

If you are one of the many gardeners who purchased dahlias or chrysanthemums this season, it is time to prepare storage places for these tubers and roots.

Clumps of dahlia tubers, with the soil left on, store well upside down on shelves in a frost-free shed with an earth floor. Chrysanthemum roots go into a deep coldframe where they can be protected frrom severe frost with blankets and wooden covers.

Anything that is worth growing is worth careful handling and storage, and the nearer we are to ideal conditions the greater our success.

WORK FOR WEEK

Brompton stock, hollyhock, foxglove, wallflower, forget-me-not and other biennial plants must be put into their places now to make strong roots this fall.

Daffodil and all kinds of narcissi should be planted in September for best rooting conditions before cold weather.

In apartment balcony tubs and on sundecks put in wallflowers and bulbs for spring. Add the bulbs between the plants.

Cuttings of many broad-leaved evergreens can be taken now and rooted in sandy, peat, compost mixture in coldframe: aucuba, laurustinus, buxus, escallonia, chamaecyparis species and juniper. Protect a little in hard weather; roots will be apparent in late spring.

Drug Tests Slammed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A government report charged Wednesday that the Food and Drug Administration failed to stop testing eight experimental drugs on humans even though the products were found to be unsafe.

The government Accounting Office report said FDA testing regulations are "lax" and do "not adequately protect the patients who take these drugs."

The GAO report was done for Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, (D-Conn.), chairman of the research subcommittee of the government operations committee.

The study covered 10 experimental drugs, and found that in eight cases the FDA had not halted their application to 4,555 patients, even though animal tests had adverse results, including cancer in three cases.

The report said that drug companies often delayed from 40 days to 19 months in reporting adverse effects of the drugs on animals. In the meantime, human experimentation began in some cases.

The experimental drugs were given to patients with terminal diseases or serious heart conditions.

Western Christians Aid Thirsty Indians

By RAM SUNDAR
CP CORRESPONDENT

BOMBAY (CP) — Devout Christians in Canada, the United States, Britain and other Western countries are helping to bring water to Indian hamlets.

Three thirsty villages near New Delhi, the Indian capital, will shortly see the sinking of tube-wells equipped with pumps. This has been made possible by donations from practising Christians in the West to the Bible for the World Inc., a missionary organization.

The head of the organization is Rochunga Pudaite, a dynamic religious scholar from the northeastern Indian state of Manipur.

Popularly known as the "Bibleman of Manipur", Pudaite has taken upon himself the task of popularizing the "Living Bible", a version of the New Testament written in simple language.

So far, Pudaite has collected nearly $6 million in donations from Western countries to finance the cost of mailing free copies of the "Living Bible" to potential readers.

To date, he has mailed the book to almost all telephone owners in India, Nepal and Bangladesh. He is hoping to mail a free copy to all telephone owners in the world within the next 10 years.

When Pudaite met Baleshwar Prasad, the governor of Delhi, last December, the latter asked if the Bibleman could not do something for the poor villages of India.

Prasad told him that among the major needs was drinking water.

Back in his hotel room, Pudaite began sending letters to 100,000 devout Christians in North America and Britain. Donations totalling nearly $40,000 have so far been collected for the wells project.

As in the case of his Bible project, contributions to the wells project are in small amounts, not exceeding $3 generally.

He hopes to provide a tube-well in each of some 75 villages with the help of Christians in the West.

According to New Delhi Statesman, Pudaite's grandfather was a head-hunting tribal in northeast India.

While the three villages which are to receive the gift of a tube-well have welcomed Pudaite's initiative, some non-Christian groups seem to resent the idea of getting help from foreign religious organizations for the project.

Workers of the Jana Sangh, a militant Hindu political party with a large following in north India, have asked Indian villagers not to depend on "Christian propaganda organizations" to construct tube-wells.

Aged Home Operators Afraid of Death

TORONTO (CP) — Panelists discussing death and dying agree that the operators of homes for the aged are more frightened of death than are the aged themselves.

The panel discussion took place at the annual convention of the Ontario Association of Homes for the Aged.

Marilyn Steels, a lecturer at the school of nursing at McMaster University in Hamilton, said that the staff of the homes for aged must be taught "how to cope with their own feelings, attitudes and philosophy of death and life."

David Adams, director of social work at the McMaster University Medical Centre, said people who work with the aged don't get as close as they should do their patients because they are not as courageous about death as are the elderly.

Reid-Meredith Introduces "The Spun Air" Wig

There's almost nothing to it . . . the "almost nothing" is in the cap. Full of holes and full of air and so lightweight that when you wear it you can forget it. All of Reid-Meredith's caps are lightweight. But "The Spun Air" is carried to the lightest extreme. In a process that's something like dropping stitches in crocheting, but a lot more scientific, the Reid-Meredith people came up with these spun knit bands held together by gossamer threads. (The diagram explains it.) The result is a bantam-weight air-conditioner, right there on top of your head. Cool breezes can blow through it, but your hair can't show through. "The Spun Air" of Dynel, the modacrylic fibre that behaves itself better than your own hair, comes in colors especially blended to look natural (in a range of 16 interesting shades). And, of course, an expert in our Wig Salon will cut and shape it for you. "The Spun Air" comes in two different styles. Each of them really pretty. And really nothing. Easily handled, too. Make an appointment . . . try one on.

200-MILE LIMIT ANSWER—DAVIS

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP)—Canadian fishermen may look forward to a free hand on their own shores in coming years, but for the moment they will have to be content with compensation for lost catches to foreign fleets, Fisheries Minister Jack Davis said Friday.

"The real answer is to get a 200-mile limit—then we've got it made," Davis told Bay of Fundy fishermen.

Davis said Canada already has a "nose count" of two-thirds of the member countries of the United Nations willing to accept the expanded Canadian fishing limit. He said the federal government is willing in the meantime to offer fishermen some form of payment other than unemployment insurance benefits. He did not elaborate.

Salmon Plant Takeover Requested

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

A crown corporation for marketing and processing salmon should be established by the provincial government, an NDP backbencher said Friday.

In a lengthy, heavily-researched speech on the control of B.C.'s food industry by "great conglomerate empires", Harold Steves told the legislature that control of the fishing industry, one of B.C.'s major food resources, is in the hands of two huge companies.

"British Columbia fishermen, cannery workers and consumers are being shafted in grand style," the Richmond MLA said.

To deal with the situation, Steves recommended the crown corporation be set up either by constructing new facilities or "putting existing facilities under public ownership and control."

He said the corporation could be financed through a two-price system for fish similar to federal oil policy.

The government should set up an inquiry into the financial structure of the fishing companies and all wholesale and retail chains in this province, Steves said, and should demand full financial disclosure.

He also recommended further loans or grants to food

Critics Slam Gas Bid

The proposed entry of the provincial government into the natural gas industry was termed "unnecessary" Friday by spokesmen for opposition parties in the legislature.

Social Credit acting leader Frank Richter said he doesn't know why the government needs another Crown corporation, since B.C. Hydro is already in the business of distributing natural gas.

Liberal leader David Anderson said the establishment of a provincial agency to get into the business of marketing, producing, transmission and processing of natural gas, promised earlier by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, is "thoroughly unnecessary and counter-productive."

Anderson said the proposal for the natural gas agency, recommended in the report of the B.C. Energy Commission, was hastily made, as evidenced by its absence from the speech from the throne delivered last week.

The Liberal leader said the government is proposing it be given monopoly control of the natural gas industry in B.C. but charged that such control will not solve the problem of

PROPANE RATION ORDERED

WASHINGTON (UPI) Despite White House reluctance to set mandatory allocations on fuel oil, President Nixon Friday ordered rationing of propane fuel, used primarily in rural areas for home heating, cooking and crop drying.

Government officials said details of the plan will be announced in a few days, and they indicated that the propane allocation may signal similar action on fuel oil.

Service stations in northern California closed down today to protest the government's freeze on the price of gasoline. In Chicago, plans went ahead for a gasoline dealers' "council of war" to decide how to deal with the federal rules.

Filling station operators in several areas of Washington state began shutting down Friday. One Mobil dealer said people were so afraid of running out of gas that he pumped 200 gallons Friday before he could get the station fully opened. When he finally did, he said, he had to shut down because there was no gas left.

As many as 50 cars at a time mobbed a gas station in Oakland, Calif., on the eve of a three-day boycott in the San Francisco Bay area which happened to coincide with the opening of deer season.

The California State Automobile Association reported that 90 per cent of the stations there were closed, and there were block-long lines at the few stations that stayed open.

'U.S. Was Set To Invade'

TORONTO (CP) — The Star quotes a former RCMP officer as saying that during the 1970 separatist crisis in Montreal, U.S. forces were prepared to move into Canada if the Quebec government fell or failed to preserve order.

But the report quoting Leslie (Jim) Bennett drew swift and official denial both in Ottawa and Washington.

"Absolutely false," said Rufus Smith, deputy assistant secretary of state for Canadian affairs in Washington.

In Ottawa, RCMP Commissioner W. L. Higgitt confirmed "that there was a person by that name working for us."

He said Bennett was engaged "in the general area" of counter-espionage operations, but added that the allegations sounded "like the ravings of a disturbed mind."

The newspaper carried a copyright story from staff writer Tom Hazlitt in Johannesburg, South Africa, on an interview with Bennett, 53, described as being head of most of the RCMP's anti-espionage operations until his retirement last year.

The story says that Bennett claims:

—During the Quebec crisis, Canada had to assign investigators to shadow agents of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency who had infiltrated Montreal on a large scale.

—The Canadian government moved tanks and other heavy equipment into position south of Ottawa to offset a buildup of U.S. forces just south of the border, the Americans being prepared to move into Canada if necessary to protect their interests in the St. Lawrence seaway.

—During the 1960s a member of the RCMP sold out to the Soviet secret police for money. The man was cashiered and now is a "drifter" in Western Canada.

The Star says Bennett signed a statement saying he left the RCMP for medical reasons after serving for 30 years with the force and British secret service.

In a later story, The Star said senior officers of the

Weir Being Used

A protest group of young Indians continued today to use a weir they have been warned is illegal to catch salmon from the Cowichan River near Duncan.

Meanwhile, federal fisheries authorities in Vancouver and the Cowichan band council, which does not support the demonstration, have yet to get together to discuss the issue although the weir was built three weeks ago.

The demonstrators, led by Gordon Elliott, 29 of the Quamichan Reserve near Duncan, say band members are not able to catch enough salmon to feed their families under current regulations.

Libya Strafes Italian Warship

ROME (Reuter) — Italy said today it will take no action over the strafing of one of its warships in international waters by Libyan fighters.

"When the prime minister sends a personal communication admitting his jets made a mistake, then there is nothing else we are required to do," Italian sources said.

THEN HE'LL QUIT

Agnew May Plead Guilty

By RICHARD M. COHEN and LOU CANNON
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Vice-President Spiro Agnew's lawyers and U.S. justice department officials have been engaged in what was described Friday as delicate negotiations concerning a possible Agnew resignation to be coupled with a guilty plea to a relatively minor offence, say informed sources.

The negotiations, according to two sources, could be described as plea bargaining. One informed source refused to say whether the negotiations were close to a conclusion or to reveal the details of what has been discussed at the justice department.

A Capitol Hill source said: "We've got it on good authority Agnew is engaged in plea bargaining—that Agnew's resignation is part of the plea."

Neither the White House, the vice-president's office nor deputy attorney-general William Ruckleshaus would comment Friday on the report.

Disclosure of these negotiations came against the backdrop of a private White House meeting between Agnew and President Nixon on Thursday, which was held at Agnew's request. Despite an official agreement that neither men nor their staffs would discuss the meeting, a White House aide said Agnew's resignation was a topic of the meeting and that the vice-president left in a "very discouraged mood."

J. Marsh Thomson, the vice-president's press secretary, would not comment on the meeting itself, but made no attempt to conceal that Agnew was discouraged.

"It's understandable that the vice-president might be letting some of this discouragement show," Thomson said. "It's a rough ball game and the slings and arrows are coming hot and heavy."

Thomson, in keeping with Agnew's enunciated policy of not commenting on "source" stories, declined to discuss reports that the vice-president might quit.

Vic Gold, Agnew's former press secretary and frequent defender, said the vice-president would not resign.

Deputy White House press secretary Gerald Warren said Friday morning that the staffs of the president and vice president would in no way whatsoever have anything to say about the meeting. When Warren was asked about the plea bargaining report, he said:

"I repeat what I said this morning."

The meeting between Nixon and Agnew was held in the president's office in the executive office building. It was the first conference between the two men since they met Sept. 1 for about two hours to discuss the accusations against Agnew.

Reportedly, Agnew had anticipated a shorter meeting Thursday. He was scheduled to play tennis later in the afternoon but cancelled his plans because the meeting ran longer than expected.

Also in Washington, a Maryland consulting engineer and close friend of Agnew has told federal investigators he has given Agnew at least $25,000 over the last decade, according to informed sources.

The information, the sources said, was provided by Lester Matz, a Baltimore County consulting engineer who has been given a limited form of immunity in the investigation of Agnew by federal prosecutors and a grand jury.

Matz, these sources said, told prosecutors his cash gifts to Agnew totalled somewhere between $25,000 and $50,000 and that they were made over a period of years.

ANGRY PRIEST RESIGNS

DENVER (UPI) — A Roman Catholic priest Friday said he burned his parish's financial records and a book of canon law because the church was a "Mafia-type thing" and the church's rigid rules were "sending people to hell."

The Rev. Richard Buhr, pastor of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Colorado Springs, burned the documents Thursday and then resigned from the priesthood.

Friday he explained that he did so because Archbishop James V. Casey demanded money from the parish for two years, and that some of it would be used for parochial schools, with which Buhr disagrees.

Adrift For Two Months

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Two men adrift aboard an overturned trimaran for more than two months in the Pacific were rescued Friday night by a British freighter, the Coast Guard reported.

Officers said James Fisher, Auburn, Wash., and Robert Tininenko, Longview, Wash., were "in very weak condition but mobile." They were picked up by the SS Benalder 900 miles southwest of San Francisco.

Tininenko told his rescuers that his wife, Linda, died on Aug. 11. The Benalder radioed that her body was not aboard the Triton.

Fisher and Tininenko were hanging on the overturned Triton, the Coast Guard said.

The Trimaran departed the State of Washington early in July on a voyage to Marine Del Rey in southern California. The Triton radioed the Coast Guard on July 11 that it had capsized. The Coast Guard conducted an intensive search but failed to turn up a trace of the 31-foot vessel.

The Benalder radioed the Coast Guard that it sighted the overturned trimaran but there were "no signs of life" on it.

However, officers said, upon closer inspection the two men were found alive.

The Coast Guard said it was not know where the Benalder would take the survivors.

Sask. Abolishes Medicare Premiums

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney has announced abolition of medical-care insurance premiums, increased welfare payments and a raise in the provincial minimum wage to $2 an hour from $1.75.

That is just the beginning of a series of measures to ease the impact of inflation on lower-income groups, he told Saskatchewan residents Friday night on the most extensive radio-television hookup in the province's history.

Virtually all radio and TV stations carried the speech live, the only missing TV station being in Lloydminster, for technical reasons.

But both his announcement and its delivery ran into immediate criticism.

Opposition Leader Dave Steuart condemned the measures over-all as inflationary, although he welcomed the higher welfare payments, and blasted the premier for requesting blanket radio-TV coverage for an announcement that Steuart said could be made as well at far less cost at a regular news conference.

Talking to reporters later, Blakeney conceded that his measures will have some inflationary effect.

WARREN KEEPS PROMISE TO QUIT LEADERSHIP

Touted as the man who would "lead the way" to Tory power in the province, Derril Warren Friday announced his resignation as leader of the party.

Oak Bay MLA Dr. Scott Wallace was voted in as temporary conservative leader until Nov. 30.

Warren's announcement finally fulfills a pre-election promise made in August, 1972 that he would resign as party leader if he failed to win a seat in the house.

Warren led the 1972 Conservative campaign with his "C'mon home" slogan and door-knocking busting, but was defeated in his home riding of North Vancouver-Seymour by NDP candidate Colin Gabelman.

He was defeated in his second bid in the Sept. 7 byelec-

B.C. Student in Chilean Jail

VANCOUVER (CP) — The mother of a 23-year-old Canadian reported missing during a two-week visit to Chile said Friday night she has been advised her son is being held in a Chilean jail and interrogated by army authorities.

Margaret Everton of Vancouver said she was notified by Canada's external affairs department that her son, Robert Everton, has been located in a Santiago prison and that Canadian embassy officials have visited him.

The young man, a former student at Simon Fraser University, was reported missing several days ago.

Mrs. Everton said her son spent the last two years in neighboring Bolivia helping to set up a clinic and hospital for native Indians.

Everton arrived in Santiago a few days before last week's army coup toppled the leftist government of Salvador Allende.

Mrs. Everton said she had been told his stay in Bolivia may have influenced the new Chilean regime's decision to question him.

The military junta says it has jailed 30 officials of the Marxist government it overthrew last week.

Gen. Oscar Bonilla, the junta's interior minister, said Friday night the officials are being held in secret locations.

Soldiers and national police killed a Communist professor in a roundup of leftists and executed two persons accused of manufacturing bombs, the government said.

The junta Friday declared illegal all Marxist parties and confirmed the Soviet Union had broken off diplomatic relations with Chile.

Once Again James Bay To Debate Its Rezoning

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Less than half a square mile in total area, but the centre of more controversy and debate than any other residential district in Victoria, James Bay comes under the spotlight again next Wednesday.

That's when the complex task of rezoning almost the entire area gets underway with the first of a series of public hearings, which are expected to draw large numbers of James Bay residents to City Hall.

To avoid conflict with working hours and encourage maximum attendance, city council has changed its usual schedule and decreed that the hearing be held in the evening.

The rezoning proposals seek to implement the broad policies outlined in the 1973 James Bay Study, by shifting the emphasis away from extensive redevelopment to the encouragment of neighborhood preservation and limited population density.

City planning staff began preparatory work several months ago, and from the outset it was agreed the magnitude of the rezoning task was such that the only sensible way of tackling it was to carve James BJay into several manageable chunks and deal with each individually.

First of the five stages to be considered at next Wednesday's public hearing, proposes an end to highrise (R3H) zoning in four separate pockets: along the Douglas frontage between Avalon and Simcoe; property in the central-Simcoe area facing Rendall Street; between Dallas and Rithet; and the St. Andrew's-Simcoe-Avalon block.

The first three are to be rezoned to medium-density (R3) use tnd the fourth to duplex (R2).

Adding to the massive amount of paper work involved in the city staff's preparations has been the recent amendment to the Municipal Act requiring affected property occupiers, as well as owners, to be personally notified of rezoning proposals.

For Stage I alone, the city clerk's staff mailed out 1,553 notifications and the total for Stage II will be over 2,000.

As an informational prelude to Wednesday's hearing, the James Bay Community Association is sponsoring a public meeting at the Newcombe Auditorium starting at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Guest speakers will include city planning director Geoff Greenhalgh, who will explain the background to the rezoning and how the proposals will affect the area's future; and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials who will discuss the federal government's new program designed to encourage rehabilitation of neighborhood areas.

The public hearing on Wednesday starts at 8 p.m.

HIGH SEAS MUSTS

Rat Traps and a Machete

By DOREEN HUNTER

If you're planning to sail the high seas, rat traps, a chopping block and machete are handy things to take along, says Frank Lane, owner of the 45-foot ketch Evviva.

The ex-construction foreman is aboard his boat at Fishermen's Wharf in Sidney after a 14-month trip to the South Pacific.

A bicycle and Eric Hiscock's Voyaging Under Sail can also come in useful.

Petty thieves find oarlocks irresistible, says Lane, so take along some spares.

Stock plenty of antibiotics in the medicine chest. For some reason, skin wounds take longer to heal at sea.

If you're planning to head for the South seas, do it now, says Lane, don't wait.

Build your boat, or buy her. Sail her up and down the West Coast. Try her out in all kinds of weather — then go.

"I should have done it 15 years ago," says the skipper.

Lane started collecting ships' fittings 20 years ago. He took two years to build Evviva, launching her in 1971.

After some dummy runs he set sail July 1, 1972, with a crew of four, heading for Lahaina in the Victoria-Maui race.

Gear failure forced Evviva out of the race. After a stop in San Diego, Lane and his crew took off again, cruising to the Marquesas, Tahiti, the Cook Islands and New Zealand.

Lane says Evviva is "exceptional going to windward." She has seven berths and a 12-foot beam. A 55-horsepower diesel engine augments her sails. She made the 2,300-mile leg from Pangopango to Hawaii in 25 days.

A five-day stretch of being becalmed was one of the few drawbacks of the whole trip.

Highlights included hunting wild pigs, feasts of turtle steak and soup, and swimming with porpoises.

Outstanding memories include discovery of deserted islands, their virgin beaches strewn with thousands of shells, and a "moon bow" arcing the night sky over Tulauha Bay in the Fiji Islands.

After a winter layover, Lane says he'll probably head for the Queen Charlottes. Evviva, which means good cheer, will be scraped and painted before she leaves.

Lane warns that if you're heading south it's best to take off before September to avoid the dirty weather that can whip up in the Pacific during the winter months.

Hunting Wild Pigs, And Feasts Of Turtle Steak

"Crew trouble," says Lane, is a common and hard-to-solve problem on ocean-going trips, compounded by confined quarters and varying personalities.

"Both Jennifer and Richard turned out to be good sailors," he concedes.

The solution, he suggests, is to confine the crew to skipper and spouse.

CHIEF COOK on the voyage from New Zealand to Victoria was Jennifer Einns who also kept a diary of the crossing.

Elford Is Insisting On Full Hunt Ban

The chairman of the regional board's parks committee said today she finds "completely unacceptable" a provincial government proposal to allow even limited hunting in giant East Sooke Park.

Frances Elford said she told Recreation Minister Jack Radford this in a telephone discussion of the issue Friday, adding she was "very disappointed" with the compromise he is considering.

She said Radford confirmed what he told the Times Thursday, that he is considering reducing the period shotguns only would be allowed for hunting in the park to one month — Nov. 1 to Dec. 2.

A decision on that will be made before Oct. 1, when current regulations would allow hunting in the park for a three or four-month period.

Radford told her he is considering assigning a conservation officer to monitor use of the park by hunters and hikers during the month open for hunting to assess the degree of conflict.

But Elford argues this cannot give an accurate picture because hikers and families using the park for outings will simply stay away when they learn the park is open to hunting through November.

The regional board wants a year-round firearms ban in the 4,000-acre park, as do a number of outdoor organizations. Radford has said that the interests of hunters must be considered as well when a park the size of East Sooke is being considered.

At present hunting in the park is regulated by the province and there is a difference of opinion between Elford and Radford on what the current regulations say.

Radford said Thursday shooting is permitted for only three months, October to the end of December.

But Elford said today an order-in-council, dated March 16, is specific, allowing shooting in the park from Oct. 1 to the end of January — four months.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell told Radford in a letter Thursday: "my board has been virtually deluged with letters from groups and individuals protesting these regulations."

Elford said Radford is wrong if he thinks there are as many hunters as hikers and picnickers interested in East Sooke Park.

The park is the only major one within a half-hour's drive of Greater Victoria and the regional board has developed a network of trails through it as an open invitation to hikers, she said.

There is ample territory elsewhere on the Island for hunters which has not been developed for hikers, she said.

She repeated regional board staff will begin an examination next week for authority the board may have to block any hunting in the park.

Junior Achievers Oct. 1

The Junior Achievement program to teach business to young people starts Oct. 1 at Dean Heights School, Richmond Road.

Meetings will be held three nights a week — Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays — from 7 to 9 p.m. They are open to Grades 10, 11 and 12 pupils.

Junior Achievement will also hold a dance Oct. 5 at the YMCA, starting at 8 p.m.

Charge Changed To Capital Murder

A charge of capital murder was read in Victoria provincial court this morning against Clifford Earle Clark following the death Friday of Mrs. Freda Helen Eveleigh.

The 56-year-old Saanich woman died at 1:35 p.m. in Royal Jubilee Hospital. Her death came 11 days after she had been shot in the head while sitting in her car in the Hillside shopping plaza parking lot.

Clark, 65, of 121 Kamloops, stood quietly in court, his head downcast, as the new charge was read.

A retired builder, he had been charged with attempted murder the day after Mrs. Eveleigh was shot. He was released on $12,000 bail awaiting a preliminary hearing set for Dec. 4 and 5 before Judge William Ostler.

Bail has now been revoked.

Judge F. S. Green remanded him in custody to Sept. 28 or until the Supreme Court approves a new application for bail.

It is understood defence lawyer Cecil Branson will apply in Supreme Court for bail probably Wednesday.

Mrs. Eveleigh, who resided at 3755 Seaton, had just come out of a health spa and was sitting in her car when a man approached with a revolver and shot twice.

Police said only one bullet hit her.

Police said she never regained consciousness after speaking a few words following the shooting.

Ask The Times

Q. Is htere a paper published by the Indian Brotherhood in B.C. and-or in other provinces? G.B.

A. The Native Brocherhood of B.C. publishes a newspaper. The Native Voice, which appears monthly. The address for it is Room 517, 193 East Hastings, Vancouver. A source there advises there are quite a number of newspapers published by a variety of Indian groups across Canada.

VETERANS 'DUBIOUS'

The prospect that the federal Veterans Hospital in Victoria will soon be turned over to the province has raised again the concern of veterans that their hospital care may be curtailed.

Ivan Smith, president of the Pro Patria branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, said today there are about 100 signatures on a petition which will be forwarded to local members of Parliament.

Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Friday transfer of the Veterans Hospital is close and an agreement could be concluded by January.

Through the years in which the issue has periodically surfaced, the federal government has made it clear veterans must be assured care before hospitals operated by the department of veterans affairs across the country will be turned over to the provinces.

While the draft agreement currently being completed between B.C. and Ottawa is understood to guarantee veterans' care, Smith said: "There are a lot of people who are a little dubious."

Veterans are particularly concerned about getting continued domiciliary care, he said. With domiciliary care, patients in effect live in the hospital.

Meanwhile, Art Young, chairman of the Capital region hospital board, said addition of the 265-bed Veterans Hospital, located alongside Royal Jubilee Hospital, will not change things overnight.

But it would provide a location for patients at Victoria General Hospital while the major renivations needed there get under way.

And it will enable Royal Jubilee Hospital to develop more fully a master plan, he said.

Sand in the Rug, Salt on the Windows

THERE'S NO TEACHER like experience for those capable of learning, and our years as owners of a waterfront property in Gordon Head taught us a number of useful lessons. The sum of these is that anyone who buys a place on the beach is some kind of nut.

We reminded ourselves and each other of that fact at frequent intervals when we decided on a change of location. Our Up-island home migrt have a sea view, but it would be located a comfortable distance inland.

"You know," I would remark as we set out on a round of house-viewing, "the oldtimers had sense. They didn t live right at the edge of tidewater. They picked a nice sheltered location where the earth would grow stuff and the gales didn't salt up their windows."

On the way back to the beach-hugging motel that was our headquarters, we'd review the properties we had inspected. All had sheltered locations, flourishing gardens, and unsalted glass windows.

"That Cape Cod had a wonderful kitchen," my dear one might say, or, "I liked the split-level ranch with the flagstone patio. But I don't think either of them is quite right for us."

This nit-picking continued until we faced the inevitable. We were longshore people, members of a wrongheaded clan that must have salt on the window glass and seagulls on the roof tree, and we might as well quit struggling against our fate.

With that dismaying truth accepted, we acquired our present abode. It stands directly in the path of the southeasters. We have seriously considered naming it "Below Tide."

Once in a while we are descended upon by guests who are also cursed with beach rat instincts. They carry rubber boots as standard equipment in their car trunks. If one of them spots a slab of fir bark or a useful end of plank in the tideline clutter, he automatically beachcombs it. He may admire the view, but his attention centres on other aspects of waterfront life.

He may ask how our fireplace behaves when the wind is up, or hold forth on the virtues of seaweed as fertilizer.

There's no point in telling a visitor of this stamp that life on a lee shore has its rarely-publicized drawbacks. The chances are strong that he is already aware of them.

Those who aren't—which is to say, most of the visitors who gaze out at a blue-satin sea and ask if we know of waterfront land for sale at a reasonable price—would be wise to look before they leap.

First comes the matter of cost. A lot on the beach, even if it's only a patch of sand and sea oats, is going to carry a premium price tag.

To the purchase price, add an assessment that will guarantee considerably higher property tax than would be levied on an inland tract of comparable size.

The house you build on it will pose specialized maintenance problems. Those bracing, salt-laden breezes that tingle the skin and expand the lungs can play the very devil with house paint and any metal less than fully corrosion-proof.

The welcome coolness of saltwater summer may be offset for at least nine months of the year by larger heating bills.

There are other and more serious drawbacks. Unless your shoreline is composed of solid rock, waterfront living remains a gamble. the sea is constantly re-arranging its margins.

In fact, that changeable sea can become an enemy of terrifying strength and destructive potential.

It can turn dry land—your precious land—into drift-littered beach. One bad storm can shatter a concrete breakwater or wipe out a rampart of chained and pile-driven logs that has defied the waves for years.

Gardening becomes a struggle against an environment hostile to land-based life, and even if you shed your boots at the back door, sharp-edged grains of sand will go to work on your carpets.

In two months or three, I will probably be brooding over these considerations and wondering if the next wind-hounded crester will dump a few tons of unordered firewood on our struggling grass.

But right now it is time to knock off for our mid-morning coffee. We will stroll with our mugs to the beach, and sit on a sun-warmed log. The mainland peaks will their heads above September haze. Perhaps the neighborhood seal will haul out on a tide-bared rock. In the shallows, a heron will be fishing.

And as longshore dwellers, we will be aware that life has nothing better to offer.

Building Firm Sold

Stewart and Hudson Ltd. and associated retail stores has been bought from Geoffrey J. Stewart of Victoria by Revelstoke Companies Ltd. of Calgary.

Stewart said Friday the principal reason for the sale was he has only a year or two before retirement.

"I was anxious to see the firm under good management," he said. "I believe it was an excellent decision to make."

The companies acquired operate eight retail home improvement and building supplies outlets in the province. Combined sales exceed $8 million.

Revelstoke owns 100 retail improvement and building supply outlets, 18 concrete plants in western Canada and five lumber mills in B.C. and Alberta.

Revelstoke's president, Steele Curry, said Friday his company does not plan any management changes.

The company has six stores on Vancouver Island — Victoria, Nanaimo, Duncan, Port Alberni, Parksville and Ladysmith. The associated companies operate stores in Surrey and White Rock.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A Saanich man will spend the next 45 weekends in jail after pleading guilty to contributing to the delinquency of a juvenile.

Police said William Howard Lacroix, 37, was boarding in a Saanich home June 23. The owner of the house was out for the night and Lacroix was alone with four children between the ages of eight and 13, including his own son.

Police said the man gave alcohol to two of the children and then induced an eight-year-old girl to go upstairs with him.

Lacroix asked Judge William Ostler in Victoria provincial court Friday to impose a weekend jail sentence so he could keep his family together.

Ostler imposed an 18 months probation term to follow the jail sentence.

The prowl by night charge arose Sept. 5 after Harris was seen around a house on Montrose Avenue. A two-year driving ban was imposed to start after the jail sentence.

Laverty told the court he had since made restitution to the motel owners.
